Mr. Lee: The local jobcentre manager is in contact with management at the dockyard and anyone facing redundancy will be eligible for the full range of help and assistance available to them through our Action for Jobs programme. This includes job placing services, information about jobs available locally and in other districts; advice on a wide range of employment matters and Manpower Services Commission schemes; and advice on and assistance with training and retraining. Until the new management, Brown and Root, has taken control on 6 April 1987, any estimates of likely redundancies or their timing must be purely speculative.

Bridge CPA Ltd., Dartington

Mr. Steen asked the Paymaster General (1) if he will advise the Manpower Services Commission to consider granting the Bridge Agency at Dartington a new contract covering the South Hams area;

(2) if, in the light of representations he has now received, he will arrange for the Manpower Services Commission to grant a new contract to the Bridge Agency in Dartington;

(3) if he will make a statement on the employment implications of the decision of the Manpower Services Commission not to renew the contract of the Bridge Agency at Dartington; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The community programme agency operated in south Deven by Bridge CAP Ltd, which covers the South Hams and Dartington areas, is based at Totnes. The decision has been made by the Manpower Services Commission not to renew the present contract and after 3 April 1987, the management of the agency will be undertaken by Community Rural Aid Ltd, a well established national community programme agent with experience of operating community programme projects in rural areas.

It is anticipated that Community Rural Aid will be able to offer the existing employees the remainder of their period of employment under the programme. The management team based at Totnes will continue to function but under fresh direction from Community Rural Aid, who influence will be mainly directed to the agency's system of operational and financial control.

Industrial Tribunals Board (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Janner asked the Paymaster General how many people from ethnic minorities have been recruited on to the Nottingham panel of the Industrial Tribunals Board over the last nine years for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: One.

YTS

Mr. Terry Fields asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to provide a meal allowance for trainees on the YTS.

Mr. Trippier: The weekly training allowance payable to YTS trainees is intended to cover normal living expenses, including meals.

The first-year allowance will be increased to £28·50 per week from April 1987. I have no plans to introduce an additional meal allowance for YTS trainees.

Mr. Nellist asked the Paymaster General what is the current real value, based on (a) retail prices index and (b) average earnings, of the YTS allowance compared with its value in 1978.

Mr. Trippier: The youth opportunities programme allowance in 1978 was £19·50, equivalent to about £39 when adjusted to take account of increases since 1978 in the retail price index, and about £47 if the adjustment is based on increases in average earnings. The YTS allowance for first-year trainees will increase from its present £27·30 to £28·50 on 6 April 1987; second year trainees will continue to receive a training allowance of £35 per week. Allowance levels must reflect the fact that trainees are still learning, and YTS provides substantially upgraded training compared with the youth opportunities programme.

Gay Men and Lesbians

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Paymaster General what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government in respect of discrimination against gay men and lesbians.

Mr. Lee: The Government have made it clear that we deplore prejudice of any kind in employment and indeed regard it as poor business practice.

Restart

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General if, for the most recently available date, and in the table form used in the Official Report, column 157 on 29 October, he will show for each Manpower Services Commission region the number of people interviewed under the restart programme; and how many have been placed into a destination.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General if he will list for the most recently available date, and in the table form used in the Official Report, column 157 on 29 October (a) how many people have been called for interview under the restart programme and (b) how many have been counselled and how many have been placed into a destination for (i) each Manpower Services Commission region, (ii) the Greater London area, (iii) the area manpower board areas covering the former Merseyside county council, the former West Midlands county council and (iv) Lancashire.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Figures given in the form used by my hon. Friend in his reply on 29 October 1986 could not be used as an answer to this question. They were only a measure of the extent to which we know of direct placements made as the immediate result of an interview. This is not a measure of the total number of people who find work or training directly or indirectly as a result of the restart programme.

Seventy-four per cent. of participants agree to pursue the offer made to them at their interview, and we do not know the results of all of them. The immediate placings do not include the many people who subsequently find jobs, or other openings, such as training, as a result of counselling, restart courses or the outcome of other elements of the restart menu. I do not therefore believe that figures in the form asked for by the hon. Member could accurately measure the "destination" of those interviewed.

WALES

Wales Advisory Board

1. Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to chair a meeting of the Wales Advisory Board for local authority higher education.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The committee of the Wales Advisory Board for Local Authority Higher Education, of which I am chairman, next meets on 3 April.

Gresford-Pulford Bypass

16. Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Wales what estimates he makes of the percentage of local labour employed in the construction of the Gresford to Pulford bypass.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Subject to temporary fluctuations as the work progresses, I estimate that about 70 per cent. of the hourly paid work force directly engaged by the main contractor will be recruited locally.

Doctors and Nurses

17. Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest available information regarding the numbers of doctors and nurses employed in hospitals in Wales; and how these compare with the numbers so employed in 1979.

Mr. Mark Robinson: At 30 September 1986, the number of medical staff employed in the hospital service in Wales, measured in whole-time equivalents, was 2,062, compared with 1,786 in September 1979—an increase of 15·4 per cent. The latest figures for nursing staff employed in the hospital service in Wales relate to September 1985; after adjustment for the reduction in working hours in 1980, the whole-time equivalent figure for 1985 is 20,812, compared with 18,035 in September 1979, again an increase of 15·4 per cent.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the sites of special scientific interest in Wales that have been, or are due to be, damaged or destroyed through developments which have been given planning permission since 1977, the type of development, the county and district in which they are situated, and the date when permission was given.

Mr. Mark Robinson: My hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment, Countryside and Local Government will be writing to the hon. Member with the information for England, Scotland and Wales.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out region by region, district health authority in-patient waiting lists, the total population living in each district, the percentage which the former represents of the latter and their national ranking by that percentage.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The latest available information relates to 30 September 1986, and is given in the following table:

	Cases on Hospital in-patient waiting lists	Estimated population mid-1985 (thousands)	Number of cases waiting per 1,000 population
Powys	59	111·4	0·5

South Glamorgan	7,620	394·8	19·3
Pembrokeshire	2,430	109·3	22·2

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out region by region, the hospital urgent in-patient waiting list in each district, together with the number of urgent cases waiting more than a month, the percentage the latter represents of the former and their national ranking by that percentage.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The latest available information relates to 30 September 1986, and is given in the following table:

Urgent cases on Hospital In-patient Waiting Lists

	Total number	Number waiting for more than one month	Number waiting for more than one month as a percentage of total

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out region by region, the hospital non-urgent in-patient waiting list in each health district together with the number of non-urgent cases waiting more than a year, the percentage the latter represents of the former and their national ranking by that percentage.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The latest available information by district health authority relates to 30 September 1986, and is given in the following table:

Non-urgent cases on hospital in-patient waiting lists

	Total number	Number waiting for more than one year	Number waiting for more than one year as a percentage of total

Farming Unions (Representations)

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales what recent representations he has received from farming unions in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have received representations from both the farming unions in Wales on a wide range of agricultural issues.

Cambrian Housing Association

Mr. Williams asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ask the Housing Corporation to investigate the reasons for the Cambrian Housing Association in Swansea failing after 12 months of negotiations to complete sales of houses to its tenants and failing to reply to correspondence from would-be purchasers and their solicitors.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I have asked the Housing Corporation office for Wales to investigate this matter and will write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid Programme

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Clydesdale (Dame J. Hart) on 11 March, Official Report, column 186, what proportion of the total aid programme in each year since 1979 has been represented by conversion of loans into grants under the policy of retrospective terms adjustment.

Mr. Chris Patten: The cost of measures set out in the Official Report on 11 March 1987, at column 186, in respect of the policy of retrospective terms adjustment, as a proportion of gross public expenditure on aid, has been as follows:

	Per cent.
1982	5·0
1985	5·9

These figures include exceptional debt relief measures in respect of Bangladesh and Uganda which fall outside retrospective terms adjustment agreements with these countries.

Students (South Africa)

Sir Ian Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is satisfied that no discrimination on the grounds of race, colour or creed is involved in the selection of South African students to attend British institutions of higher education at public expense.

Mr. Chris Patten: The training in question is specifically for the benefit of non-white South Africans disadvantaged by the apartheid system. A limited number of opportunities for study are provided to specially selected white South Africans through other channels.

Sir Ian Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will set out the criteria employed by the Educational Opportunities Council of the United States of America in choosing South African students to attend British institutions of higher education at public expense.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Education Opportunities Council is a non-governmental organisation in South Africa and is not funded by the United States Government. Students are selected on an individual basis and in the light of their educational qualifications.

Sir Ian Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the financial basis of the arrangement made between his Department and the Education Opportunities Council of the United States of America.

Mr. Chris Patten: We pay a fee to the Educational Opportunities Council for its administrative services in selecting candidates for the new programme of undergraduate training announced by my noble Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, Baroness Young, in another place on 21 October 1986.

Sir Ian Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will state the reasons why his Department was unable to make its own arrangements for the selection of South African students to attend British institutions of higher education at public expense.

Mr. Chris Patten: My Department is involved in the selection process through the agency of the British Council representative in Johannesburg; the large number of applications for scholarships has necessitated the involvement also of the Educational Opportunities Council, a non-governmental organisation in South Africa.

Sir Ian Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the students currently selected to attend British institutions of higher education from South Africa at public expense have been sponsored or in any way recommended by the African National Congress.

Mr. Chris Patten: None.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Civil Defence

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the report on the study and assessment of industry capabilities to meet the requirements of civil defence is available for public inspection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Progress has been made with the study, but I am not able to say when it will be complete. The study will remain confidential.

NATO (Committees)

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make the minutes of the meetings of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's Industrial Planning Committee available in the Library.

Mr. Butcher: No. It would be inappropriate to do so because the minutes of meetings contain security classified information.

Chrome Ore

Mr. Blair asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the quantity, source, and port of entry of the imports of chrome ore to Great Britain in each year since 1980.

Mr. Alan Clark: Port of entry data for all years and data on source from 1984 are not available. Imports to the United Kingdom of chrome ore, classified to STIC sub-group 287·91, for 1984 and 1985 were 129·8 and 137·7 thousands of metric tonnes respectively. Latest information for 1986 shows imports for January-November of 119·6 thousands of metric tonnes. Information for the years 1980-83 is as follows:

United Kingdom imports of chromium ore and concentrates 1980-83

EC (Regional Development Fund)

Mr. Hicks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he hopes to announce a decision regarding the two applications made by the Cornwall county council in January 1986 for financial assistance under article 15 of the European regional development fund main regulation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I cannot give a firm date, but I hope that this problem will be resolved soon.

Devonport Dockyard

Mr. Hicks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will state the specific measures that his Department has taken to alleviate the adverse economic and social effects for the Plymouth travel-to-work area resulting from the projected job reductions at Her Majesty's dockyard, Devonport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I will reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Lonrho plc

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received in relation to the purchase by Lonrho plc of 10 whisky brands from Guinness plc.

Mr. Howard: Representations have been received and the inspectors appointed to investigate the affair and membership of Guinness plc are aware of them. It would not be in the public interest for me to give further details.

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received in relation to a possible breach of section 231 of the Companies Act 1985 by Lonrho plc in relation to its Liechtenstein subsidiaries Blorg and Contango.

Mr. Howard: Representations have been received and are under consideration. It would not be in the public interest for me to give further details.

Insider Dealing

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with the authorities on the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man about developing an agreed policy to limit insider dealing.

Mr. Howard: There have been some informal discussions at official level. I would hope, in due course, to arrive at arrangements along the lines envisaged by the hon. Member.

Council of Industry Ministers

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the outcome of the Council of Industry Ministers meeting on 19 March.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Ministers discussed proposals from the European steel producers association Eurofer for reducing excess European steel capacity. The Council agreed that substantial excess capacity still exists, and the Commission will now have discussions with Eurofer and the producers designed to achieve further closures, and aimed primarily at lossmaking firms. I made it clear that the United Kingdom has already made a major contribution to the restructuring of the European steel industry, and that the United Kingdom steel industry was now in profit. As no BSC volume was contained in the Eurofer proposals, nothing under discussion at the Council will affect the three-year BSC strategy agreed in August 1985, or will prejudice decisions on BSC strategy after 1988.

Ministers also discussed the steel production quota system. The Commission will make new proposals concerning 1988 in time for discussion at the next meeting of the Industry Council.

The Council also agreed a two-year extension to the SPRINT programme whose main aim is to help improve the competitivness, particularly of small and medium-sized firms, by setting up means to assist the exchange of technology and innovation practice.

PRIME MINISTER

EC Butter Surplus (Expenditure)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the report of the Court of Auditors regarding the legality of the decision of the Agriculture Council on the financing of the disposal of butter surpluses; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

Court of Auditors

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will propose at the next meeting of the European Council that representatives of the Court of Auditors should be present at all future meetings of the Council; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. The president of the court already addresses the ECOFIN Council each year, and court representatives attend meetings of appropriate Council committees.

Information Services

Dr. Owen asked the Prime Minister if she will list the expenditure in 1987 on a weekly basis of all Government information services itemised by Department and function; and what were the comparable figures for each of the two previous years.

The Prime Minister: The information is not recorded centrally. I refer the right hon. Member to my answer on 19 November 1986 at column 190 to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) for the costs of the press office at 10 Downing street.

Public Bodies (Women)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister how many women she has appointed to public bodies since 1979; and what percentage this represents of total appointments.

The Prime Minister: I have appointed or re-appointed 45 women to public bodies since 1979. This represents 14·0 per cent. of such appointments since that date for which I have been responsible.

ENERGY

Electricity Supply

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has available as to the number of occupied dwellings not connected to the public electricity supply according to local authority areas or other geographical areas.

Mr. Goodlad: I regret that no such information is available.

Nuclear Safety

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) whether ambulance staff have participated in the exercise at the local emergency plan at Chapelcross, Sellafield, Wylfa, Trawsfyndd, Oldbury, Berkeley, Hinkley Point, Winfrith, Dungeness, Bradwell and Sizewell; and, in each case where units were involved, if he will list which ones participated;

(2) if he will list for each of the following power stations what studies have been made of the problems of evacuating all low mobility groups in the event of a worst case atomic accident at Chapelcross, Sellafield, Wylfa, Trawsfyndd, Oldbury, Berkely, Hinkley Point, Winfrith, Dungeness, Bradwell, Sizewell and Hartlepool; and if he will also list for each study the geographical area covered;

(3) what specialist equipment, including personal dosimeters, radiac survey meters and decontamination meters are available for ambulance staff at Chapelcross, Sellafield, Wylfa, Trawsfyndd, Oldbury, Berkely, Hinkley Point, Winfrith, Dungeness, Bradford and Sizewell, respectively; and in each case what training staff have received;

(4) what training has been given to ambulance staff to deal with a major accident at each of the following nuclear installations: Chapelcross, Sellafield, Wylfa, Trawsfyndd, Oldbury, Berkely, Hinkley Point, Winfrith, Dungeness, Bradwell, Sizewell and Hartlepool.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 12 February 1987, c. 318-19]: The Central Electricity Generating Board has now amended advice which it earlier gave me. CEGB medical centres, although often colloquially known as ambulance centres, in fact rely on National Health Service ambulances. My reply of 12 February is otherwise unaffected.

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Energy when public safety siting criteria for nuclear installations were last changed or updated; what information on such safety criteria has been published by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 12 February 1987, c. 317-18]: The last decision to change public safety siting criteria was that announced by the then Minister of Power on 6 February 1968, at column 235 of the Official Report. Information on siting criteria has been published by the Health and Safety Executive in its booklet "The Work of HM Nuclear Installations Inspectorate", a copy of which is in the Library of the House, and in the documents referred to therein.

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Energy what statistical demographic criteria, for each type of nuclear reactor, are used in Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate's assessment of the safety of sites for nuclear power stations; if he will publish a list showing for each existing nuclear power station (a) the relevant limiting criteria compared with (b) the actual population figures in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 12 February 1987, c. 317-18]: The main criteria used by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate cover the population at particular distances from a site, viz:

Distance km	Guideline population
	MAGNOX	AGR
0 to 2	1,400	9,000
2 to 3	4,600	35,000
3 to 5	16,000	113,000
5 to 8	45,000	325,000

There are related criteria which guide the NII about the maximum population to permit any 30-deg sector of the area round a site. Populations for existing sites, taken from the 1981 census are:

	Distance (km)
	0 to 2	2 to 3	3 to 5	5 to 8
Berkeley	320	2,000	7,900	8,300
Bradwell	460	190	7,200	3,900
Calder Hall	140	2,100	2,300	8,100
Chapelcross	250	410	11,000	3,100
Dungeness	60	140	590	6,000
Hinkley Point	120	300	1,200	2,800
Hunterston	50	100	6,400	1,400
Oldbury	250	260	1,800	30,000
Sizewell	140	3,200	3,600	4,200
Trawsfynydd	320	290	1,500	5,400
Wylfa	460	730	1,100	1,600

The NII does not necessarily insist on rigid adherence to these criteria but, in addition, takes account of various unquantifiable factors.

Once a site has been accepted for a nuclear station, arrangements are made to ensure that residential and industrial developments are so controlled that the general characteristics of the site are preserved, and that local authorities consult with the inspectorate with regard to any proposed new development which falls outside the guidelines.

Coal Liquefaction

Mr. Raffan asked the Secretary of State for Energy if the Government have yet been able to attract private investment for the Point of Ayr coal-to-oil liquefaction project.

Mr. Peter Walker [pursuant to the reply, 26 February, c. 364]: I am pleased to announce that the Department of Energy will now be making available support of about £2·5 million for British Coal's liquefaction project at Point of Ayr, Clwyd, North Wales. This will cover the period of construction, commissioning and operation, and follows the signing by British Coal of an agreement with Ruhrkohle Oil and Gas, a subsidiary of the largest German coal-producing group, Ruhrkohle, bringing it into the project on a non-exclusive basis. Departmental support for this stage of the project had been conditional on British Coal's securing acceptable private sector participation.

This important project is at an advanced stage of construction and should be commissioned early next year. The construction phase to date has been funded by British Coal with support from the European Commission. I trust that the new agreement marks the beginning of increasing industrial interest in this process.

SCOTLAND

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the sites of special scientific interest in Scotland that have been, or are due to be, damaged or destroyed through developments which have been given planning permission since 1977, the type of development, the regions and districts in which they are situated, and the dates when permission was given.

Mr. Ancram: As the hon. Member is seeking similar information for England and Wales, the Nature Conservancy Council is compiling this in respect of Great Britain as a whole, My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will be writing to the hon. Member with this information as soon as it is available.

In-Patient Waiting Lists

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out region by region, health board in-patient waiting lists, the total population living in each district, the percentage which the former represents of the latter and their national ranking by that percentage.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested is as follows:

[2] The numbers on the waiting list for a particular health board may include numbers of people not resident in that health board area.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will set out region by region, the hospital urgent in-patient waiting list in each district, together with the number of urgent cases waiting more than a month, the percentage the latter represents of the former and their national ranking by that percentage;

(2) if he will set out region by region, the hospital non-urgent in-patient waiting list in each health district together with the number of non-urgent cases waiting more than a year, the percentage the latter represents of the former and their national ranking by that percentage.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the hospital in-patient waiting lists for each health board at the end of September 1986.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 19 March 1987, c. 580]: The information requested, which relates to 30 September 1986 and is provisional, follows:

Scottish Development Agency (Public Relations)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the annual budget of the public relations department of the Scottish Development Agency; and how many people it employs.

Mr. Lang: The budget for the current financial year is £660,000 and the department employs nine staff.

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland why the Scottish Development Agency put out to private public relations consultants the arranging of the ceremony of the declaration of continuing commitment to the east end of Glasgow; and what was the total cost of this event.

Mr. Lang: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

GEAR Project

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the full cost of the evaluation study of the GEAR project as commissioned by the Scottish Development Agency.

Mr. Ancram: This study is not yet completed, but is expected to cost about £125,000.

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he proposes to take in the light of the findings of the Scottish Development Agency evaluation study of the GEAR project regarding the adequacy of the resources made available to the project; if he will now make additional resources available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Although the consultants commissioned by the Scottish Development Agency gave an oral account today of the evaluation work at the final meeting of the GEAR governing committee, their report is not yet completed. Their findings will have to be considered in due course by all the partners involved in GEAR. Throughout the 10 years of GEAR, it has been made clear that each partner is responsible for the level of its programmes in the area, in the light of the resources available to it overall.

Electricity and Gas Disconnections

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the numbers of domestic consumers disconnected from (a) their electricity and (b) their gas supply in (i) the quarter and (ii) the 12 months to December 1986 in each electricity and each gas region in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The information requested on electricity disconnections is not held centrally but I am asking the chairmen of the South of Scotland Electricity Board and the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board to write to the hon. Member.

Information in respect of gas consumers is a matter for British Gas plc. I am asking the chairman to respond to the hon. Member's request.

Ross Memorial and Nicholson MacKenzie Hospitals

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be in a position to respond to the request from the Highland health board for the proposed change of use of the Ross memorial hospital, Dingwall, and the proposed closure of the Nicholson MacKenzie hospital, Strathpeffer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a formal submission from the Highland health board seeking approval for its proposals. A decision will be made once the submission has been fully considered.

Health Service Premises, Ross-shire

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps were taken to ensure that the correct procedures for public consultation were carried out over the Highland health board's proposed closure and change of use of health service premises in Ross-shire as outlined to him in its letter of 4 December 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Health boards are required to carry out extensive consultation before submitting any proposal for closure or significant change of use to the Secretary of State. It is for each board to determine the range of consultation necessary in any particular case but, as a normal rule, boards are expected to invite comments from the relevant local health councils, area professional committees, regional, district or islands councils, trade unions and staff associations.

The submission at present under consideration shows that consultations have taken place with all of these organisations, as well as general medical practitioners in Tain and Beauly and members of the public who had registered opposition to the proposals. Copies of the consultation correspondence have been lodged with the Secretary of State as part of the board's submission.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact which his recently announced 5·7 per cent. increase in revenue spending allocations for 1987-88 will have for the Highland health board, particularly with respect to (a) the additional overheads associated with Raigmore hospital, Inverness and (b) the proposal from the Highland health board of 6 December 1986 for the closure and change of use of health service premises in Ross-shire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Highland health board's revenue allocation for 1987-88 amounts to an increase of 6·84 per cent. over their allocation for 1986-87, well in excess of the average increase of 5·7 per cent. to Scottish health boards. Once increases in pay and prices have been met, it is estimated that the board will be able to devote 2·14 per cent. or £1·15 million to the growth and development of services in its area. This compares with an average growth of 1 per cent. for Scotland. In addition the board have been asked to identify savings equivalent to 1·5 per cent. of their net revenue allocation from greater efficiency and to direct these into patient care. The board's allocation is expected to be more than sufficient to meet any new commitments associated with Raigmore hospital, Inverness. If the board's proposals for the closure and change of use of health service premises in Ross-shire are accepted and implemented the resultant savings will not accrue to the board until 1988-89.

Scottish Development Agency (Consultancy Work)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total value of work put out to consultants by the Scottish Development Agency for each of the last five years.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the then Minister for Industry and Education to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mr. Craigen) on 28 April 1986 at column 298. That answer covered the last six full financial years for which information is currently available.

Criminal Statistics

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for Scotland and each police force area in Scotland the total number in 1986 of (a) all crimes, (b) crimes of violence against the person, (c) burglaries, (d) thefts and offences of handling stolen goods, (e) offences of fraud and forgery and (f) offences of criminal damage.

Mr. Lang: This information is not yet available. The 1986 recorded crime figures for Scotland are currently being compiled and will be published shortly.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to lay before Parliament the statutory orders designating the Breadalbane and Loch Lomond environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 20 March 1987, c. 653]: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to be able to lay the necessary designating order shortly.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what sites he will consider for designation as environmentally sensitive areas in 1988 in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 20 March 1987, c. 653]: In selecting any further sites for designation as environmentally sensitive areas in Scotland, my right hon. and learned Friend will, in the first instance, consider carefully the list of areas already suggested by the Nature Conservancy Council and the Countryside Commission for Scotland.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Welsh Plant Breeding Station

26. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the current level of employment at the Welsh plant breeding station, Gogerddan.

Mr. Walden: I understand that the number of staff employed at the Welsh plant breeding station on 1 April 1986 was 211 and is expected to be 191 on 1 April 1987.

Hertfordshire

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received any recent representations regarding the current and future provision of education in Hertfordshire.

Mr. Dunn: Yes. A number of representations have been received on possible reorganisation of secondary school provision in Hertfordshire. Correspondents have been advised of their rights to lodge objections should statutory proposals be made under the provisions of the Education Act 1980.

Natural Environment Research Council

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list the total number of staff employed by the Natural Environment Research Council annually since 1979; and if he will give the projection for the next two years.

Mr. Walden: The total numbers of staff employed by the Natural Environment Research Council since 1979 (excluding those directly employed by grant-aided associations) were:

31 December	Number
1980	3,034
1982	2,915
1983	2,828
1986	2,481

The total numbers now forecast on the basis of the council's scientific strategy are expected to decline by about 100 a year over the next few years.

YTS (Meals)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will allocate funds to local education authorities for the provision of free or subsidised meals to those students attending local education authority schools or colleges as part of a YTS; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: There are no plans to allocate funds in this way.

School Closures

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many school closures his Department has approved since 1979; and what information he has on the subsequent use of the school buildings and land.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Since 1979, the closures of 1,576 schools have been either approved by me or my predecessors or determined by local education authorities, under section 12(7) of the Education Act 1980. Authorities and voluntary bodies are entitled to make use of or dispose of redundant school sites and premises as they wish without informing the Department.

GCSE

Dame Jill Knight asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions his Department has had with the Secondary Examinations Council about its decision to withhold its approval for inclusion in the general certificate of secondary education of the syllabus entitled "English as a Second Language"; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department is aware of the Secondary Examinations Council's decision, which will not affect pupils already embarked on syllabuses. I understand that the chairman of the council has written explaining the council's reason, and my right hon. Friend will respond when he receives that letter. However, in his view all pupils awarded a GCSE certificate in English need to have aspired to the same standards, and the introduction of a special version of English would be detrimental to the interests of those pupils seeking the qualification and to the responsibilities of schools to ensure that all pupils achieve a good standard in English.

Teachers (Special Qualifications)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is available to his Department on the numbers of teachers in each local education authority with special qualifications relevant to the teaching of pupils with statements under the Education Act 1981, other than teachers employed full-time in special schools; if he will publish what information is available for the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

"Preparation for Parenthood in the Secondary School Curriculum"

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he received the report of the inquiry carried out into "Preparation for Parenthood in the Secondary School Curriculum" conducted for his Department by the University of Aston; what was the total cost to the Government of that inquiry; what were its recommendations; which of those recommendations have so far been implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: In September 1983 the Department received the report of this commissioned research project, which was funded by grant totalling £128,778 over the period 1979-83. The report included a number of wide-ranging recommendations aimed at improving parenthood education in secondary schools; most of these were addressed to local education authorities, schools and teacher training institutions. So far as the Department is concerned, account has been taken where appropriate of the recommendations in Her Majesty's inspectorate's discussion document on "Health Education from 5 to 16". The Education (No. 2) Act 1986 now requires that any sex education given in schools shall encourage pupils to have due regard to moral considerations and the value of family life. The Act will also transfer control over the content and organisation of sex education to the new school governing bodies with greater parental and local community representation; and governing bodies will have an increased say over other parts of the school curriculum.

Loughborough University (Member's Correspondence)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton may expect a reply to the letter which he wrote to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Buckingham, (Mr. Walden), on 21 October 1986 regarding Loughborough university, with a further letter on 30 January 1987 and a telephone call to his private office recently; and if he will instruct his Department to deal more expeditiously with correspondence from hon. Members.

Mr. Walden: I replied to my hon. Friend on 20 March. I apologise unreservedly for the delay in writing to him. The Department has introduced a new system for handling correspondence from hon. Members. We fully expect this to lead to fewer delays in replying.

Playground Supervision

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will introduce legislation to impose a statutory requirement on education authorities in England and Wales to provide playground supervision in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

CIVIL SERVICE

Appointments

Mr. Williams asked the Minister for Civil Service in what circumstances regulation 11 of the Civil Service Commission General Regulations 1986 permits the requirement for open competition to be waived in making an appointment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The Civil Service Commissioners have discretion to waive open competition in the circumstances specified in regulation 11 of the Civil Service General Regulations. These can be summarised as follows:

(a) where the commissioners are satisfied that this is for special and exceptional means justified by the needs of the public service and the proved merits of the candidate;

(b) to enable staff to be transferred into the Civil Service with their work following a machinery of government change;

(c) to enable staff to be transferred from elsewhere in the public service to the Civil Service;

(d) to offer appointments in shortage grades to candidates who have demonstrated their suitability in competing for equivalent or high level appointments for which they have been narrowly unsuccessful;

(e) to facilitate inward secondments to the Civil Service; and

(f) to enable former civil servants to be reinstated in their former grade or re-employed in a lower grade.

The commissioners use these discretionary powers sparingly. Each appointment under (a) is recorded in the commissioners' annual report; there are typically one or two such cases a year. Appointments under (b)-(d) are made infrequently. Under (e) 52 inward secondments were approved from 1 May 1986 to 31 December 1986. There are approximately 400 cases a year under (f).

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. Watts asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was paid in income tax by the top 5 per cent. of income earners in 1978-79 and in the most recent year for which figures are available; and whether he has any estimate of the total incomes of this group of taxpayers in each of those years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In 1978-79 the total gross income of the top 5 per cent. of income tax payers (about 1·08 million married couples and single people) was about £15 billion and their tax liability was about £4·85 billion. The latest estimates for 1986-87 are that the top 5 per cent. of income tax payers comprise 1·03 million married couples and single people who have gross income of £38 billion and tax liabilities of about £11·2 billion.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table giving the range and size of income tax cuts since 1979 in the same form as the answer to the hon. Member for Thurrock (Dr. McDonald) on 4 April 1985, Official Report, columns 705-6.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The table shows estimates of reductions in income tax liabilities at 1987-88 income levels of the proposed allowances, thresholds and rates for 1987-88 compared with an indexed 1978-79 regime. For the comparison, the 1978-79 allowances and thresholds have been indexed in line with the increase in the RPI between December 1977 and December 1986. As child tax allowances were being phased out in 1978-79 they have been excluded from the comparison.

Range of total income in 1987-88[1]	Number of units paying tax in 1987-88	Reductions in income tax compared with 1978-79 indexed regime
		Amount	Average per tax unit

5,000-10,000	7·60	1,950	[2]250
10,000-15,000	5·30	2,550	480
15,000-20,000	2·70	1,950	710
20,000-30,000	1·60	2,000	1,240
30,000-50,000	0·60	1,450	2,380
Over 50,000	0·15	1,750	11,600
TOTAL	21·2	12,000	540

[1] All information is in terms of tax units — that is, married couples ae counted as one and their incomes combined.

[2] By reference to the estimated numbers who would be liable to pay tax under the indexed 1978-79 regime; this number is some 900,000 greater than the numbers paying tax in 1987-88, some 800,000 in the income range below £5,000 and 100,000 in the range £5,000 to £10,000.

Personal Allowances

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish figures showing (a) the gross cost in 1987-88 of replacing all existing personal income tax allowances with tax-free, non-means-tested tax credits or basic incomes of £10 a week for each person aged 16 or over, (b) the additional costs of allowing each individual, counting husbands and wives separately, fixed amount tax discounts as follows: (i) £3 a week, £6 per week and £7·50 a week on earned income and (ii) £3, £6, £7·50, £21 and £30 per week on investment income including occupational pensions.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Assuming indexation of personal allowances, it is estimated that replacing all existing personal allowances with tax-free non-means-tested basic incomes of £10 per week for each person aged 16 or over would lead to a yield to the Exchequer of about £7 billion in a full year at 1987-88 income levels. The offsetting costs from allowing tax discounts on earned and unearned incomes for each individual are estimated to be as follows:

Weekly tax discount on earned income (£)	Cost in a full year at 1987-88 income levels (£ billion)
7·50	10

Weekly tax discount on investment income[1] (£)	Cost in a full year at 1987-88 income levels (£ billion)
3·00	3
21·00	10
30·00	12

[1] Assuming that occupational pensions and the state retirement pension are treated as investment income.

Company Taxation

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1957, 1964, 1973, 1979 and each of the past three years his estimate of the amount of mainstream corporation tax paid by companies as a percentage of their total income; and if he will provide a similar percentage for the amount of tax paid or payable at the standard rate by the company or the recipient on the amount distributed by way of interest and dividends.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The present imputation system of corporation tax was introduced with effect from April 1973; a consistent series for mainstream corporation tax is therefore available only after 1973. The required figures, excluding public corporations, are:

Financial year	Mainstream Corporation Tax		Tax on dividends and annual payments[1]
	Amount £ billion	Percentage of income[2] Per cent.	Amount £ billion	Percentage of income[2] Per cent.
1979	2·8	7·1	2·1	5·3
1983	3·8	7·0	2·4	4·4
1984	5·0	7·5	3·4	5·1
1985	6·7	9·0	4·3	5·7

[1] Advance corporation tax on dividends and tax on companies annual payments.

[2] Total company income in the calendar year as defined in the national accounts, net of interest payments.

Estimates of 1986 company incomes will be available later this year.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a forecast of gross income for tax purposes in the current financial year of (i) financial companies and institutions, (ii) companies engaged in the extradition of oil and gas and (iii) other industrial and commercial companies; and if he will include figures for each category of tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that this information is not yet available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the amount of mainsteam corporation tax collected on the profits of industrial and commercial companies, excluding the extraction of oil and gas, as a percentage of its gross income for tax purposes in 1957, 1967, 1977 and in each of the past three years, together with the amount of taxes collected or payable; and if he will provide similar figures for tax on the amount distributed.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The present imputation system of corporation tax was introduced with effect from April 1973; a consistent series for mainstream corporation tax is therefore available only after 1973. I regret that it is not possible to identify the contribution of extraction of oil and gas to total company income and to dividend payments. The required figures for all industrial and commercial companies, excluding public corporations, are:

Financial year	Mainstream Corporation Tax		Advance Corporation Tax on dividends
	Amount £ billion	Percentage of income[1] Per cent.	Amount £ billion	Percentage of income[1] Per cent.
1983	3·3	7·0	1·7	3·6
1984	4·4	7·4	2·7	4·6
1985	5·7	8·9	3·3	5·1

[1] Total company income in the calendar year as defined in the national accounts, net of interest payments.

Estimates of 1986 incomes of industrial and commercial companies will be available shortly.

Dividends (Taxation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the yield in the current financial year of the standard rate of tax on dividends not subject to the relief in the hands of the recipient.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Advance corporation tax receipts for the current financial year are estimated at £4·4 billion. I regret that a reliable estimate of repayments of the associated tax credit is not available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on how much British banks have disbursed in loans to Latin America in each of the past three years.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Data on gross disbursements by British banks to individual countries are not routinely collected. The available statistics for United Kingdom-registered banks showing their consolidated claims on individual countries are published in the Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin, table 15, copies of which can be found in the House of Commons Library.

Privatisation

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report up-to-date figures for fees paid in respect of all privatisation issues since 1979 on a comparable basis to the figures supplied to the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) on 24 May, Official Report, columns 560-64.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) on 24 May 1985, at columns 560-64, and to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Thurrock (Dr. McDonald) on 12 June 1985, at column 447. Except for the British Telecom and British Aerospace (1985) sales the figures given in these earlier replies, for total fees and commissions paid in the categories specified, are unchanged. Updated figures for those sales and the figures for subsequent sales are given below:

Share sale	Fees and Commissions (£000 including VAT)
British Telecom	97,650
British Aerospace 1985	9,381
Britoil 1985	8,100
Cable and Wireless 1985	10,313
British Gas	[1]80,314
British Airways	[1]12,803

[1] Estimates: final accounts not yet available.

Personal Incomes

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many persons, compiled in terms of tax units and after contributions to occupational pension schemes have been deducted, have a gross earned income of (a) £80,000 per annum and (b) £100,000 or more per annum in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In 1984-85, the latest year for which information is available from the survey of personal incomes, it is estimated that 17,000 single people and married couples had gross earned incomes (after contributions to occupational pension schemes) of £80,000 or more, of whom 9,000 had incomes of £100,000 or more.

Mr. Forman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report data from the most recent survey of personal incomes on (a) total income, (b) total deductions, (c) total income tax, (d) total tax units and (e) total tax units paying tax for each country in the United Kingdom and each standard region in England.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 19 February 1987]: I regret that incorrect estimates for total deductions were contained in the table shown in my reply. The corrected information is included in the revised table.

	Total income £ million	Total deductions[1] £ million	Total income tax[2] £ million	Number of tax units Thousands	Number of taxpaying units Thousands

[2] Income tax liabilities have been calculated without deduction for reliefs given at source at basic rate, but after allowance for relief due in excess of basic rate.

Family Taxation

Mr. Gryffi asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the present income tax bill of a married man with average earnings with two children.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A married man on average earnings in 1986-87 pays income tax of £41·50 per week. His income tax bill would be unaffected by having two children, but child benefit would be payable at current rates of £14.20 per week.

Overseas Remittances

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the gross amount of rent, interest dividends, royalties, profits and so on remitted from the United Kingdom to private and other persons not normally resident in the United Kingdom in the coming financial year by category of income showing the amount likely to evade tax, the amount exempt from tax and the amount of tax collected.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that this information is not available.

Stamp Duty

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report his forecast for the revenue from stamp duty in the next financial year on (i) stocks and shares and (ii) dwellings, together with his estimate for the outturn this year.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information is as follows:

	£ million
	Estimated Outturn 1986-87	Forecast 1987-88
Stamp Duty on:
stocks and shares (including Stamp Duty Reserve Tax)	840	890
residential property	570	700

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the amount of stamp duty payable on share transactions (a) since deregulation in the stock markets and (b) in a comparable period the previous year; and what is the implied rate at which the share capital of the listed companies is being turned over annually.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what methods are used to publicise the premium bond numbers of unclaimed prizes.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Details of all prizes unclaimed for 18 months or longer are included in the January, April, July and October supplements to the London Gazette. Copies of the supplement are available for inspection at larger post offices.

Mortgage Interest Payments

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the number of cases in which tax relief will be given through MIRAS or otherwise on mortgage interest payments in the next financial year, together with (a) the estimated cost to the Exchequer and (b) the number of recipients of working age and their distribution by personal category gross and by range of gross income together with the average amount of relief given;

(2) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing his estimate of the number of cases in which higher rate tax relief will be given on mortgage interest payments in the current and in the next financial year, together with (a) the gross amount of interest qualifying for relief, (b) the amount of higher rate relief payable and (c) the number of recipients of working age and their distribution by personal category and by range of gross income, together with the average amount of relief given at the standard and higher rates.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Wife's Earned Income Allowance

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the numbers and estimated cost of the wife's earned income allowance in the next financial year by range of the wife's income and of the joint incomes of husband and wife.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Married Women (Taxation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing by personal category and range of income for elderly and for other taxpayers the gross and net cost to the Exchequer of separate taxation, without aggregation, of married women in the coming financial year on the assumption that each spouse has a transferable allowance equal to the single allowance and that the wife's earned income allowance will be abolished; and how much of the loss would be in respect of higher rate tax on earned income and of standard rate and higher rate tax, respectively, on unearned income.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Taxation

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the estimated loss of (a) income tax (b) higher rate tax and (c) capital gains tax in the next financial year on, respectively, life assurance premiums, retirement annuity premiums and lump sum payments to pensioners, distinguishing between non-contributory schemes which provide a maximum pension of 50 per cent. of eligible earnings and other schemes and the investment income of occupational pension schemes, distinguishing between employees and the self-employed.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Straw asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update the answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) and the hon. Member for Stockton (Mr. Wrigglesworth) of 28 April 1986, Official Report, column 329, to cover 1987-88 as well as 1985-86 and 1986-87, in comparison to 1978-79.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Married Couples (Taxation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing in the case of the wife's earnings election the estimated cost to the Exchequer in the next financial year, together with tables showing (a) the estimated loss of tax in terms of each combined gross income band and (b) for (i) husbands and (ii) wives, the numbers assessed separately by range of income together with the gross amount of income and the gross amount of unearned income.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Unearned Income

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing by personal category and range of income the number of women with gross unearned income of £1,000 a year or more, and those with less, together with the average amount of unearned income in each category.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Adley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will seek to eliminate value added tax from ice-cream that actually contains milk products.

Mr. Brooke: No.

Mr. Strang asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the National Economic Development Council following the Budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Budget will be discussed at the next meeting of the National Economic Development Council on Wednesday 1 April.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his reply of 13 March, Official Report, columns 319-20, about MV Silver Sea, on what date Her Majesty's Customs and Excise began their inquiries; when he expects the inquiries to be completed; and whether he will place a copy of any report on the conclusion of the inquiries in the Library.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Personal Income (Rates and Taxation)

Mr. Straw asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing (a) the proportion in percentage terms, (b) the amount in current prices and (c) the amount in constant 1985-86 prices of personal income taken by taxation and rates for the year 1986-87, taking account of any changes announced in his Budget statement and any previously announced changes, and for each of the years 1978-79, 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87 for each level of average earnings, each category of taxpayer, and each category of taxation and rates, in the manner of the answers of 3 April 1985, Official Report, column 676, 2 July 1985, Official Report, column 112 and of 26 March 1986, Official Report, column 530.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Self-Employment (Taxation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1957, 1961, 1971, 1981 and the latest year for which figures are available, the number of tax units taxed as self-employed compared to the number classified in the employment statistics and population censuses as self-employed, the amount of income assessed to tax, and the amount of income and the amount of tax paid per head in terms of 1980 prices; and if he will provide an estimate for the current financial year.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 18 March 1987, c. 536]: The number of tax units (married couples counted as one unit) and the corresponding number of individuals with any income (or losses) assessable to income tax under case I or II of schedule D (that is, self-employment income) is shown below for 1981-82 and 1984-85 (the latest year for which information is available). Comparable information for 1957, 1961, 1971 and the current financial year is not available.

Also shown are the Department of Employment's estimates of numbers classified as self-employed at June each year, based in the 1981 census of population updated by the annual labour force survey. Those included are confined to people with their main job as self-employed.

Year	Numbers with any income assessable to case I or II of Sch. D (thousands)		Numbers with main job as self employed, at June (thousands)

1984-85	2,478	2,755	2,496

For the tax units with any income assessable to case I or II of schedule D, their total income (including other earned income and investment income) and, at 1980 prices, total income per tax unit and tax per tax unit was as follows:

Tax units with income assessable to case I or II of schedule D

Property Income

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the years 1958, 1964, 1969, 1974, 1979 and 1985 the gross overseas income for tax purposes of the companies and financial institutions as defined on page 168 of the annual supplement to Economic Trends 1987, the amount set off against tax of other countries under double taxation relief, and the amount of tax collected;

(2) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the greater detail than table 1.10 in the edition of the United Kingdom "National Accounts" 1986, for the years 1975, 1979 and 1985 the property income from abroad net of foreign taxes and the property income paid abroad less United Kingdom taxes for each sector, including financial institutions, together with the totals of United Kingdom tax and foreign tax payable and the amount of double taxation relief on income from abroad.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his replies, 18 March 1987, c. 537]: The closest estimate, available for a run of years, of gross overseas income for tax purposes of companies and financial institutions is provided by the series "Property income from abroad net of foreign taxes" in table 1.10 of United Kingdom "National Accounts" (1986 Edition). Figures are as follows:

£ million

Year	Number
1964	900
1969	1,374
1974	6,209
1975	6,563

More detailed information on property income from abroad net of foreign taxes and property income paid abroad less United Kingdom taxes is published in Section 5 of "United Kingdom Balance of Payments", 1986 Edition. "Property income from abroad net of foreign taxes" in the national accounts is identical to "Earnings on external assets of the United Kingdom" in the balance of payments; "Property income paid abroad net of UK taxes" is identical to "Earnings on UK liabilities to overseas residents". A limited analysis by sector is available.

The double taxation relief allowed to United Kingdom residents in respect of foreign taxes paid on income or capital gains from foreign sources in 1974, 1975, 1979 and 1983 amounted to £2,500 million, £2,200 million, £1,390 million and £2,100 million respectively. Information is not available for years later than 1983 or before 1974. The relief given for 1979 and 1983 is estimated to be in respect of foreign taxes paid of approximately £1,800 million and £3,500 million respectively. No figure is available for 1974, 1975 or for 1985. Estimates of United Kingdom taxes on property income paid abroad are published in table 1.10 of United Kingdom "National Accounts," 1986 Edition. No sectoral breakdown is available.

Income from abroad is not taxed separately in the United Kingdom but is considered together with other forms of income, deductions, reliefs and allowances in computing a company's profits chargeable to corporation tax. Hence, the amount of tax charged or collected on income from overseas is not known.

Shareholders

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list, region by region, including Scotland and Wales, the numbers and proportions of shareholders identified in his survey; and if he will list shareholders by income groups.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 20 March 1987, c. 647]: I have placed a copy of the survey report in the Library of the House; the information requested is to be found in tables 30 and 31.

Russell David Construction Ltd.

Mr. Ashton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will investigate the loss of the 714C tax exemption certificate awarded to Russell David Construction Ltd., of Crabtree park, Worksop, by the Retford tax office which was sent but lost in the post; and if he will issue another certificate forthwith.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 19 March 1987, c. 592]: The Inland Revenue is pursuing with the Post Office the loss of a document sent by registered post. Meanwhile, a replacement certificate has been authorised and should be in the hands of the company shortly.

ENVIRONMENT

Energy Conservation

25. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he proposes to introduce to improve the conservation of energy within present and projected buildings within his responsibility.

Mr. Chope: Many energy conservation measures have been introduced either as specific schemes or integrated into other projects over the past few years, and there is a continuing programme of work.

Play Schemes

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he plans to take to increase the provision of holiday play schemes by each local authority.

Mr. Tracey: It is for individual local authorities to determine which projects to support from their own resources or from resources allocated to them through specific programmes such as the urban programme, within any relevant guidelines. In 1986-87 support for children's play projects through the urban programme totalled about £6·6 million.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will tabulate in the Official Report the breakdown of the 8,000 jobs referred to in the 1985-86 annual report of the London Docklands Development Corporation as having been created in its area under categories, transferred from outside the area, development completed or initiated prior to 1981, employment by the corporation, and any other major category listed on an annual basis.

Mr. John Patten: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the sums spent by the London Docklands Development Corporation since 1981 on training initiatives, stating the sums spent on each main project.

Mr. John Patten: The London Docklands Development Corporation has spent £2,218,000 on training initiatives, between July 1981 and February 1987. the sums spent on the main projects are as follows:

Project Title	Spent at February 1987 £000
Information Technology Centre (ITEC)	458
Skillnet	538
Stepney Green Furniture Workshop	135
Shadwell Pierhead	321
Rotherhithe Community Workshop	106
Technical Regeneration of Docklands	158
Other Training Initiatives under £100,000	502
TOTAL	£2,218

First-time Buyers' Scheme

Mr. Blair asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money is at present allocated to the first-time buyers' scheme.

Mr. Tracey: Expenditure on the Homeloan scheme is determined by the level of demand. Estimated expenditure on grants and loans under the scheme in 1987-88 is £2·1 million.

Women's Computer Centre (Camden)

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will direct the London residuary body to allow Camden borough council to secure the work of the women's computer centre by transferring the lease of Wesley house to the council.

Mr. Chope: No. I understand that the council of the London borough of Camden has offered to acquire Wesley house from the London residuary body, which has resolved to dispose of it to the council at market value.

Homelessness

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report figures for the numbers of households accepted as homeless in the London borough of Southwark for each year since such figures were first compiled.

Mr. Tracey: The numbers of households accepted as homeless are as follows:

Year	Number
1979	651
1980	680
1981	[1]700
1982	808
1983	1,337
1984	1,527
1985	1,443
[2]1986	1,170

[1] Estimated.
[2] Nine months.

The current legislation on homelessness came into operation in December 1977, and now forms part of the 1985 Housing Act.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total number of people in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in the London borough of Southwark in January 1987 and the equivalent dates for 1986, 1985, 1984 and 1983; and what information he has as to the present cost to the London borough of Southwark of keeping people in bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

Mr. Tracey: The latest date for which information on bed-and-breakfast accommodation is available is September 1986. The number of households accommodated in bed-and-breakfast accommodation at the end of September in each year since 1983 is as follows:

At end September	Number
1984	32
1985	52
1986	101

The cost of bed-and-breakfast accommodation during 1985-86 was £630,155 gross and £606,591 net.

Urban Programme (Lambeth)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why the urban programme resources for the London borough of Lambeth have been reduced from an estimated outturn of £13·2 million in 1986-87 to an allocation of £12·8 million in 1987-88.

Mr. Tracey: There is strong competition for urban programme resources. They are allocated to local authorities on the basis both of their needs, and of their performance in delivering programmes which meet ministerial priorities. Lambeth still has the largest allocation in London.

Local Authority Current Expenditure

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much local authority current expenditure has risen in real terms since 1978-79.

Mr. Chope: Local authority net current expenditure in England has risen by 13 per cent. in real terms (based on net current expenditure in cash terms, adjusted to constant prices using the GDP deflator) over the period 1978-79 to 1986-87.

Housing Finance

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the cost or receipts to public funds at the local and national level in the current financial year of (a) subsidies to local authority and new town housing net of rents receivable before any remission to tenants on account of housing benefit and other remissions, (b) receipts from the sale of local authority and new town housing, (c) mortgage interest tax relief on private housing and (d) housing and other benefits to tenants of local authority and private landlords, respectively.

Mr. John Patten: I shall answer this question shortly.

Empty Houses

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to (a) how many and (b) what percentage of houses in (i) the public and (ii) the private sector in each local housing authority area are empty at the latest available date.

Mr. John Patten: The latest information is for April 1986, from the English authorities' housing investment programme returns, and it is included in the table which follows. All authorities provided figures for their own stock and these have been shown separately; they exclude closed dwellings, of which there were 1,700 in England. Authorities' information about other vacant housing is generally less accurate and some authorities were unable to provide estimates.

Rates

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether a grant will be made to local authorities to publicise the means of payment of rates by those who will receive income support; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Such a grant is not necessary. The rate demands and notice of rates and precepts rules 1985 provide that each rate demand note shall contain a statement about the rights of ratepayers to elect to pay rates by instalments; and shall also give a general indication of the right to a rebate, and contain a statement that the rating authority will, on request, provide further information about the availability of such a rebate.

Mr. Fry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will give the total figure that he now expects to provide in rate support grant to English counties in 1987-88; and if he will also list the amount payable to each county;

(2) if he will list county by county the population figures upon which the 1987-88 rate support grant has been based.

Mr. Chope: The total amount available for block grant for counties in England in 1987-88 is £3,814 million for total expenditure equal to the settlement assumption. Details of individual authorities' grant entitlement and information about population data are included in tables which were made available in the Vote Office and Libraries of the House on 20 March 1987.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider establishing a national weekly collection system for rates payments by persons on income support through the Post Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: All ratepayers have the right to pay their annual rates bills in at least 10 instalments. It is for individual local authorities to decide whether they wish to allow more than ten instalments, and to establish payment arrangements appropriate to their areas.

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by authority what projected rate fund balances appear in their rates estimates for 1987-88.

Mr. Chope: The information is currently being returned and is not yet available for most authorities. The return date for the inquiry is 1 April.

Salcombe Estuary

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has as to the degree of consultation with the local harbour board undertaken by the Nature Conservancy Council prior to the designation of the entire Salcombe estuary as a site of special scientific interest;

(2) what representations he has received on the designation of the entire Salcombe estuary as a site of special scientific interest in the light of the proposed dredging of the low-water and other channels for fishing vessels.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall answer these question shortly.

London Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what efforts are made by his Department to determine the amounts spent by London authorities on policies concerned with women's rights, gay rights, local economic development and support for ethnic minorities.

Mr. Chope: Those necessary for the work of the Department, and consistent with the fact that the primary responsibilities for discretionary spending by local authorities rests with those authorities.

Local Government Reform (Detriment Payments)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects that all eligible staff of the abolished authorities will have received their full entitlements to detriment payments.

Mr. Chope: Entitlements to financial detriment compensation are payable on a continuing basis for a period of eight years from the date when the loss or diminution of emoluments occurs. Such entitlements cannot be paid in full until this period has expired.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the reasons for the delay in determining the detriment payments to the 388 eligible staff from the Greater London council.

Mr. Chope: This is a matter for the London residuary body.

Youth Centres, Bradford

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he is to take a decision on an application, submitted by Bradford corporation, under the urban programme, for a Bangladeshi youth centre in Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: A decision will be made as soon as possible.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 12 March, Official Report, column 269, he can now announce his decision on the application submitted by Bradford council under the urban programme to replace the West Bowling youth centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: This project was approved on 13 March.

MV St. Giles

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of the MV St. Giles at Rosyth naval base.

Mr. Chope: Dredging services at Rosyth naval base are undertaken partially by contract and partially by the PSA's own vessel, the St. Giles. The National Audit Office recommended that there was no special need to retain an in-house dredger at Rosyth and that all dredging should be undertaken by contract. The recommendation is at present under consideration by the Department.

Landscape Conservation

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list the organisations that have responded to his Department's document entitled "Protecting the Countryside: the Government's Consultation Proposals for Landscape Conservation Orders"; and if he will make a statement about the responses received.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall answer this question shortly.

Ammonia Emissions

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest figures for annual emissions of ammonia in the United Kingdom; and what has been the trend in emission levels since 1960.

Mr. Waldegrave: The university of Utrecht calculated that annual emissions of ammonia in the United Kingdom in 1982(from animals, fertilisers and industry) were of the order of 405,000 tonnes. A similar study undertaken by Imperial college, London in 1980 calculated that there had been a slow increase in emissions of ammonia arising from livestock (which make up some 80 per cent. of total national emissions) from 321,000 tonnes in 1960, through 336,000 tonnes in 1970 to 366,000 tonnes in 1980.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will estimate the input of inorganic nitrogen to the North sea from the atmosphere and originating from United Kingdom sources; and what assessment he has made as to the significance of this input in a whole sea context;

(2) if he will estimate total United Kingdom inputs to the North sea for 1983, 1984 and 1985 of lead, cadmium, mercury, zinc, arsenic and copper; and if he will indicate the proportions of the overall inputs to the North sea that these figures represent.

Mr. Waldegrave: I will write to the hon. Member.

Unleaded Petrol

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the United Kingdom petrol market he estimates will be given over to unleaded petrol by 31 December.

Mr. Waldegrave: The recent announcement, by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, of a reduction in the tax on unleaded petrol can be expected to stimulate a still wider availability of this new fuel, which is already on sale at more than 200 stations throughout the United Kingdom. It is too early yet to estimate how quickly this change will prompt demand by the motorist for unleaded petrol.

Lord Dowding (Statue)

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is intended to erect a statue to the memory of the late Air Chief Marshal, Lord Dowding, for his leading contribution in the battle of Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall answer this question shortly.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has yet reached decisions on the proposed reorganisation of the United Kingdom territorial organisation of the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend and I have decided to proceed with the PSA reorganisation from 1 April 1987, although in a number of cases closure will be effected over time and some staff may remain outstationed in the interim. We are satisfied that the proposals to merge the regional and area tiers of management will yield considerable managerial and cost benefits.

The pattern of regional offices in England and Wales will be unchanged and the effect on existing area offices and area estates offices is given in the table. This excludes the south-east region, where reorganisation has already begun, and the London region, which is the subject of a separate study.

Although in Scotland the Aberdeen and Glasgow area offices will close, we have decided to retain a substantial PSA presence in both locations to handle maintenance and estates functions. All design work will ultimately be concentrated in Edinburgh.

The current area office at Rosyth will close with essential functions being transferred to Edinburgh.

Inner Urban Areas

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those local authorities in England and Wales which are designated or include areas that are designated under the Inner Urban Areas Act 1978; and in respect of which of these authorities arrangements have been made with him under section 7 of the Act.

Mr. Trucey [pursuant to his reply, 20 March 1987]: The following districts have been specified as designated districts under the Inner Urban Areas Act 1978. Under the Act, the council of both the district and the county which includes the designated district are designated district authorities. The districts indicated [1] are those in relation to which special arrangements have been entered into under section 7 of the Act.

Compulsory Purchase Orders

Mrs. Shields asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to extend the terms of compulsory purchase orders to include adequate compensation for any inconvenience experienced by the owner of a property.

Mr. Trucey [pursuant to his reply, Friday 20 March 1987]: In accordance with the Land Compensation Acts, the compensation payable for compulsorily purchased land already consists in most cases of the market value of the land (without taking into account the effect on that value of the scheme for which the land is being taken), a disturbance payment, and a home loss payment where the claimant is displaced from a home where he has lived for at least five years. The disturbance payment covers such items as the claimants's legal and surveyors' fees, removal costs and reconnection charges.

New Build Housing Schemes

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the share respectively of (a) public direct labour schemes and (b) private contractors' schemes in local authority house-building for the years 1985 and 1986, respectively, in (i) England and Wales and (ii) Greater London.

Mr. Trucey [pursuant to his reply, Friday 20 March 1987]: The numbers of local authority new build housing schemes, based on returns made to the Department by local authorities of tenders accepted, are as follows:

	(i) England and Wales		(ii) Greater London
	1985	1986	1985	1986

NORTHERN IRELAND

Warning Devices (Republic Territory)

Mr. Maginnis asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if details have been furnished to the Government of the Irish Republic of the disciplinary action taken against the Army officers held responsible for the recent placing of warning devices on the territory of the Republic.

Mr. Tom King: No.

Motor Vehicles (Offences)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report figures for Northern Ireland corresponding to those published for England and Wales in "Offences Relating to Motor Vehicles England and Wales" issued by the Secretary of State for the Home Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food (Alternative Sources)

Mr. Murphy asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will initiate a publicity campaign to inform the public of the availability and use of alternative sources of food from hedgerows and uncultivated land.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No.

Butter

Mr. Deakins asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what alternative methods of supporting the market are to be used by the European Economic Community Commission in place of intervention buying of butter.

Mr. Gummer: The Council regulations modifying the intervention regime in the dairy sector provide that, in the event of permanent intervention being suspended, buying in by intervention agencies may continue on the basis of competitive tenders and that other measures will be taken to maintain market stability. There is also provision for support measures for other dairy products such as cream. It is up to the Commission, taking account of the advice of the milk management committee, to decide what action is appropriate. By way of illustration, the Commission has suggested that existing schemes for the disposal of intervention stocks could be adapted to apply to current production. For butter, this would include sales to non profit-making organisations, concentrated butter for cooking and use in food manufacture.

Mr. Walters asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the per capita butter consumption of the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available; and what percentage of this butter was produced in New Zealand.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Consumption of butter in the United Kingdom is estimated at 5 kg per capita in 1985. The quota for imports of butter from New Zealand was equivalent to 28 per cent. of United Kingdom consumption in that year.

Pesticides

Sir Richard Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department has obtained toxicological data prepared by the International Bio Test Laboratory in Illinois and submitted by a pesticide manufacturer.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department receives toxicological data from a number of sources in support of applications for pesticide approvals. Where these include data originating from the international bio test laboratory, we require independent validation of the methodology and results of the tests involved.

Food Aid

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food where residents in the London borough of Wandsworth should make inquiries to find out the distribution point for the collection of surplus European Economic Community foods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Inquiries should be made with a local branch of one of the charitable organisations on the list which I gave on 29 January in my reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes).

Mr. Corbett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will list those organisations in Birmingham, by each parliamentary constituency, responsible for the distribution of surplus European Economic Community butter, cheese and beef; and on what dates distribution of each commodity began in each constituency.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 19 March, 1987 c. 601]: As I made clear in my reply of 11 March to the hon. Members for Walthamstow (Mr. Deakins) and for Birkenhead (Mr. Field), I do not have information on distributions by geographical area, nor do I plan to have such information compiled.

NATO Food and Agriculture Planning Committee

Mr. Redmond asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the reply of 13 February 1986, Official Report, column 527, if he will make the minutes of the meetings of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation Food and Agriculture Planning Committee available in the Library.

Mr. Donald Thompson: That is not possible, because the proceedings of the NATO Food and Agriculture Planning Committee are security classified by NATO.

Ice-cream

Mr. Adley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of ice-cream (a) manufactured and (b) sold in the United Kingdom contains (i) mainly milk products, (ii) some milk products and (iii) no milk products.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is not readily available in the form requested. However, under the Ice-Cream Regulations 1967, ice-cream must contain not less than 5 per cent. fat, and not less than 7·5 per cent. milk solids other than fat. "Dairy" type ice-cream must contain not less than 5 per cent. milk fats, not less than 7·5 per cent. milk solids other than fat and may contain no fat other than milk fats, unless present as a result of another ingredient.

Mr. Adley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the effect on current surplus United Kingdom milk production of requiring that all ice-cream currently (a) sold and (b) manufactured in the United Kingdom be made of milk products supplied from the United Kingdom farming industry; and if he will seek to make this his policy.

Mr. Gummer: Under European Community law, it would not be possible to require that ice-cream sold or manufactured in the United Kingdom be made of milk products supplied by the United Kingdom farming industry.

Mr. Adley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to prohibit the sale of ice-cream unless it contains a substantial percentage of milk products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Under the Ice-Cream Regulations 1967 ice cream must contain at least 5 per cent. fat and 7·5 per cent. milk solids other than fat. "Dairy ice cream" must contain only milk fat (other than that present as a result of the use of egg, flavours, emulsifying or stabilising agents). I understand that a good quality dairy ice cream will contain a considerably higher proportion of milk products than the minimum laid down. Consumers are therefore able to make a choice, according to the price they are prepared to pay, between ordinary ice cream, and dairy ice cream. I have no plans to amend these regulations.

Salcombe Estuary

Mr. Steen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a grant towards the cost of dredging the low-water channel in the Salcombe estuary for commercial shellfish vessels working the shellfish quays;

(2) when he issued a consent for the dumping of the dredged soil from the low-water channel in the Salcombe estuary; and if there were any conditions attached to this consent;

(3) if he will make funds available to the Salcombe Harbour Board to fund the costs of the proposed monitoring by the Nature Conservancy Council of the disposal of the dredged soil from the low-water channel in the licensed dumping ground.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Milk

Mr. Walters asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the per capita milk consumption of the United Kingdom in the last year which figures are available; and what are the comparable figures in other European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Estimates of per capita consumption of liquid milk for nine member states are published by the Milk Marketing Board in "EEC Dairy Facts and Figures, 1986". The latest published figures for 1985 are as follows:

Consumption of Liquid Milk in EC Member States[1] kg/head

Germany	71·5
France	82·8
Italy	[2]77·7
Netherlands	93·7
Belgium	75·9
Luxembourg	83·6
United Kingdom	126·7
Irish Republic	190·5
Denmark	130·2

Cheese

Mr. Walters asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the per capita cheese consumption in the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available; and what percentage of this cheese was produced in France.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Consumption of cheese in the United Kingdom is estimated at 6·5 kg per capita in 1985. There are no statistics on the consumption of cheese produced in France but imports of cheese from France in 1985 were equivalent to 3 per cent. of consumption in that year.

Outgoers Scheme

Mr. Walters asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will consider increasing the level of compensation under the outgoers scheme for dairy farmers.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

North Sea Fisheries (Disease Levels)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the numbers of marine vertebrate fish sampled in 1983, 1984 and 1985 with the specific objective of monitoring the disease levels in the populations present in the North sea; and if he will list the species involved.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Freezer Trawlers

Mr. Wallace asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for St. Helens, North (Mr. Evans) 17 February, Official Report, columns 601-602, he will state the factors which he treats as relevant in determining the allocation of the additional licences for freezer trawlers for the pelagic fisheries.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 19 March c. 598]: It would be difficult to draw up an exhaustive list of such factors and I do not think that it would be useful to do so while the applications are still under consideration.

Food Subsidies

Mr. Hicks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the quantities of whole milk, semi-skimmed milk, whole milk yoghurt, semi-skimmed milk yoghurt, buttermilk, natural cheese and processed cheese, supplied to each local education authority in Great Britain on which an EEC subsidy was claimed for the 1984-85 and 1985-86 school years.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 19 March, c. 613]: This information is not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Surplus food (Quality)

Mr. Pike asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many instances have occurred where supplies of surplus European Economic Community food have been withdrawn after distribution due to doubts regarding its quality.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 19 March, c. 612]: Only two such instances have been notified to my Department, both of them relating to the hon. Member's constituency. In either case, the product concerned was cheese purchased from commercial sources.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what research has been carried out into the relationship between flouridation of water supplies and the aluminium content of water and the implications of this for the incidence of Alzheimer's disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The Department is aware of a recent study into the effect of boiling fluoridated water in aluminium cookware. There is no evidence that aluminium by itself is the cause of Alzheimer's disease and much evidence points to the contrary. Nor is there any conclusive evidence that aluminium is a contributory factor. An initial epidemiological investigation into the relationship of water quality to Alzheimer's disease is being conducted by the Medical Research Council neuroendocrinology unit in Newcastle. The first results are expected in 1988.

AIDS

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he intends to introduce further screening for the AIDS-related virus HTLV I;

(2) whether his Department is monitoring the number of people in Britain with the AIDS-related virus HTLV I; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what figures he has for the number of people carrying the HTLV I virus;

(2) what plans he has to test blood supplies for the HTLV I virus;

(3) what plans he has to combat the spread of the HTLV I virus; what facilities he is making available to screen people for the HTLV I virus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Members have replies as soon as possible.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will estimate the current cost of screening blood donations for the AIDS virus;

(2) whether he has any plans to review the current screening programme for the AIDS virus in blood donations; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make a statement outlining the procedures currently adopted for the screening of blood donations for the AIDS virus;

(4) what efforts are made to trace the donors of blood which is found through the screening process to contain the AIDS virus;

(5) whether he is satisfied with the current level of confidentiality with which the screening of donated blood for the AIDS virus is carried out.

Mr. Newton: There is no need at present to review the current programme for screening blood donations for HIV.

The safety of the blood supply in this country is maintained in two ways. First, all potential donors are given a leaflet which asks those who are at risk of AIDS not to donate blood. Secondly, all blood donations are tested for antibodies to HIV.

Initial tests are carried out in the laboratories of the regional transfusion centres and donations are only released for use when all the tests have been completed and found negative.

Where an initial test is positive, it is repeated by the RTC. Samples of repeatedly positive donations are sent to one of the reference laboratories of the Public Health Laboratory Service for confirmation. In the rare event of a confirmed positive test, the donor is informed by a doctor from the RTC and given counselling help.

A donor's test results and medical history are always kept in the strictest confidence.

Of nearly 3·5 million donations tested for antibodies to HIV since screening began, only a tiny number (·002 per cent.) have been found positive. The estimated cost of screening all blood donations for antibodies to HIV in 1986-87 is £2·75 million.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he has made any estimate of the total cost of introducing a national blood screening programme to identify carriers of the AIDS virus;

(2) what assessment he has made of the feasibility of introducing a national screening programme to identify carriers of the AIDS virus.

Mr. Newton: Testing for anti-bodies to AIDS virus is already available nationally on a voluntary basis. The Government are not persuaded that a national screening programme would be a sensible public health measure at the present time, and consequently no detailed assessment of the feasibility and costs have been undertaken.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what detailed laboratory evidence is available to his Department that the cell-free human immunodeficiency virus which gives rise to AIDS has been identified in human semen; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what detailed laboratory evidence is available to his Department suggesting that a number of cells which contain either AIDS-related viral RNA or pro-viral DNA have been isolated in semen; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether it remains the view of the Government's Chief Medical Officer that the AIDS virus is present in semen in very high concentrations; and if he will make a statement outlining the published laboratory data from which this conclusion was drawn.

Mr. Newton: There is no evidence to suggest that whether or not HIV in semen is cell-free or cell-associated is relevant to the transmission of infection from semen. Nor are the number of cells in semen containing AIDS-related viral RNA or pro-viral DNA known to be relevant. The quantification of HIV in semen is not an exact science, but the available epidemiological evidence confirms the views of experts worldwide that the virus is present in high enough concentrations in the semen of infected individuals so that transmission of infection can occur if this semen enters another person's rectum or vagina. I also refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 19 March at column 626 and to the references made available there.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement outlining the published data upon which the Government have based their conclusions that prevention of semen transmission in sexual contact by use of a condom will lower the risk of AIDS transmission.

Mr. Newton: It is well established that the use of condoms protects substantially against sexually transmitted disease. The value of condoms in providing protection against HIV infection in particular was discussed in an editorial in the British Medical Journal on 15 November 1986 which quoted the literature available at that time. Further data was published in the Journal of the Americanl Medical Association in Vol. 257 p. 640-44 (1987) and in the New England Journal of Medicine in Vol. 316 p. 345 (1987).

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what research data are available to him about the alleged correlation between the widespread promotion of barrier contraceptives and the level of unprotected sexual activity among the young in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what account was taken in formulating the Government's AIDS advertising programme of the report in British Medicine about Swedish research into the correlation between the availability of contraceptives and the level of sexual activity, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

(3) what consideration was given in the formation of the policy underlying the Government's AIDS advertising programme to the statement of Dr. Judith Bury of the Brook Advisory Centres regarding the alleged correlation between the provision of contraceptives and the incidence of unprotected sexual intercourse.

Mr. Newton: We are not aware of any good evidence to suggest that the wider availability or promotion of condoms or other contraceptives leads to higher levels of unprotected sexual activity. Our own surveys amongst young people reveal a high level of understanding that reduction in the number of sexual partners can reduce the risk of catching the AIDS virus and that the use of condoms can also do so.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he plans any review of his anti-AIDS policy in the light of the views expressed by Dr. John Seale in the British Medical Journal, a copy of which has been sent to him, regarding the effectiveness of the Government's advertising and public education campaign as a contribution to the control of AIDS.

Mr. Newton: We have no such plans.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance the Chief Medical Officer at his Department has given on the professional position of doctors suffering from AIDS; what information he has as to the number of (a) general practitioners, (b) hospital doctors and (c) other doctors suffering from AIDS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Pensioners (Food Allocations)

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will consider an additional page in the state pension book to enable an entry to be made to register that the pensioner has received his or her allocation of free European Community butter, cheese, meat, and so on.

Mr. Major: It is desirable to restrict entries in state pension order books to those necessary for the operation of the pension payment system. Entries in order books by other bodies could lead to confusion and difficulty. For this reason, it would not be appropriate to include an additional page to record receipt of food from the current Economic Community distribution scheme. Moreover, release of stocks of butter etc. from the short-term assistance scheme will terminate on 31 March.

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is planning any new initiatives to prevent solvent abuse, especially aimed at young abusers.

Mrs. Currie: No new central initiatives are planned by the Department although we shall continue to keep the need for such initiatives under review.

Benefits

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the cost of doubling child benefit (a) if the increase was offset against all other child additions for which claimants drawing social security benefits were entitled, (b) if it was offset, additionally, where the increase was larger than any child addition entitlement, against any supplementary benefit entitlement, (c) if it was further offset against any entitlement to national insurance benefits and (d) if the increase was taxed (i) at the rate for higher rate taxpayers at their marginal rate of tax and (ii) at the standard rate where this was applicable.

Mr. Major: Based on benefit rates coming into effect in April 1987, the approximate cost, in Great Britain, would be as follows:

(a)	3,850
(b)	3,600
(c)	3,500
(d) (i)	3,350
(d) (ii)	2,400

These figures assume the accumulative effect of the offset measures specified. In addition there would be very substantial administrative costs.

Severe Weather Payments

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what provision will be made under the income support scheme for claimants needing help in paying fuel bills in exceptionally severe weather.

Mr. Major: The exceptionally cold weather provision will be reviewed in the light of this winter's experience. It is too early to say what the outcome of that consideration will be.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what savings have resulted from the introductions of the selected list scheme of National Health Service drugs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Information from the Prescription Pricing Authority indicates that the Selected List Scheme saved £75 million on the drugs bill in 1985-86. The savings in each of the seven therapeutic groups was:

	£ million
Cough and Cold remedies	22
Analgesics for mild to moderate pain	19
Indigestion remedies	8
Vitamins	7½
Laxatives	2
Bitters and tonics	1
Benzodiazepine Sedatives and Tranquillisers	15½

As forecast, this initiative has thus released £75 million for the continuing growth in the National Health Service.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each waiting list return since 1 January 1974 the numbers of (a) urgent cases, (b) urgent cases waiting more than a month, (c) non-urgent cases, (d) non-urgent cases waiting more than a year and (e) the total number of urgent cases waiting.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks. For information from September 1983 I refer the hon. Member to the hospital in-patient waiting list summary booklets, copies of which have been placed in the Library. Information, first collected centrally on statistical return SBH203 in September 1975, could be provided for earlier years only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will set out region by region, district health authority in-patient waiting lists, the total population living in each district, the percentage which the former represents of the latter and their national ranking by that percentage;

(2) if he will set out region by region, the hospital urgent in-patient waiting list in each district, together with the number of urgent cases waiting more than a month, the percentage the latter presents of the former and their national ranking by that percentage;

(3) if he will set out region by region, the hospital non-urgent in-patient waiting list in each health district together with the number of non-urgent cases waiting more than a year, the percentage the latter represents of the former and their national ranking by that percentage.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer of 25 February, Official Report, column 317, he will list in the Official Report those health authorities which have decided, or are considering whether, to use allocations from the waiting list funds for projects involving the private sector indicating (a) the specialties involved, (b) the cost and (c) the private sector participants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 4 March 1987, c. 625]: The health authorities listed have decided, or are considering whether, to use resources from within their allocations from the waiting list fund for projects involving the private sector:

Region	District
Yorkshire	Scunthorpe
Trent	Sheffield Leicestershire Doncaster (three projects)
North West Thames	Hounslow and Spelthorne
North East Thames	Southend
South East Thames	Hastings Bromley Dartford and Gravesham Tunbridge Wells
Wessex	East Dorset Portsmouth
Oxford	Milton Keynes
Mersey	Crewe
North Western	Blackburn Barnsley (two projects) Bolton Stockport Bury

Details of contracts are in some cases still to be finalised but on current plans these projects provide for the treatment of nearly 2,900 waiting list cases at a cost of £1·57 million. The specialties involved are ear, nose and throat, orthopaedics (mostly hip replacements), gynaecology, general surgery, urology and ophthalmology.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state the numbers of operations of each kind that he expects to be achieved in each district health authority as a result of the allocation of the extra £25 million to reduce the waiting lists.

Mr. Newton: The information is not available in precisely the form requested. I have today placed in the Library full details of the schemes planned by Regional Health Authorities for the improvement of waiting lists and times in their districts supported from the waiting list fund of £25 million for 1987-88.

Hospital Car Service

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether drivers in the hospital car service are reimbursed for using their cars at the same rate as administrative staff of the National Health Service who use their own cars on official business.

Mrs. Currie: Health authorities are free to reimburse drivers in the hospital car service either at rates agreed by the General Whitley Council for NHS staff or at a rate determined in the light of local circumstances.

Medical Staff

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of consultant medical staff per unit in each regional health authority in England and Wales at the latest available date.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Diet Costs

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement regarding the calculation of the additional expense of whole diet costs in "S Manual" clause 4736 from 1980 onwards, indicating from what data base within the 1979 "Family Expenditure Survey" the indications on average expenditure on food for different age groups used in the calculations was derived.

Mr. Major: These figures are provided by the Chief Adjudication Officer as part of his guidance to the independent adjudication officers. I understand that the original figure of £9 quoted in 1981 as the average expenditure on food for an adult was derived from unpublished data from the 1979 "Family Expenditure Survey" in respect of single pensioners, married couple pensioners and single adults under 65 in the lowest 20 per cent. household income bracket. The figures in respect of children were based on a percentage of the relevant scale rates similar to that for adults. The figures have been increased in subsequent guidance in line with the food element of the retail prices index. They were last increased in November 1985 and will be increased again next month to coincide with the general uprating of benefits.

Hackney Hospital (Psychiatric Wards)

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on conditions in psychiatric wards in Hackney hospital in the light of the report of the City and Hackney community health council;

(2) if he will hold discussions with the City and Hackney district health authority about conditions in psychiatric wards in Hackney hospital;

(3) if he will set up an inquiry into conditions in psychiatric wards in Hackney hospital.

Mrs. Currie: I have seen a copy of a newsletter produced by Hackney community health council, which reported a number of allegations about conditions in psychiatric wards in Hackney hospital. Such allegations are matters for City and Hackney health authority to investigate in the first instance and take any action if appropriate.

Attendance Allowance

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what categories of disabled people his counsel informed the Court of Appeal might be able to claim attendance allowance as a result of the judgment of the court in the Moran case.

Mr. Major: In his address to the Court of Appeal following delivery of the judgment in the Moran case, counsel for the Secretary of State indicated that the judgment could affect the attendance allowance entitlement of people who suffer from epilepsy, diabetes, haemophilia, heart attacks and angina, or multi-sensory handicaps; elderly people who suffer attacks of confusion; and children who are mentally handicapped or hyperactive, or who suffer from asthma or cystic fibrosis.

How the judgment might be applied is a matter for the independent Attendance Allowance Board, taking account of the references in the judgment to the importance of the facts of the individual case. We shall be considering our response to the judgment in the light of advice from the Board.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to ensure that disabled people who may be entitled to attendance allowance or to the higher rate of attendance allowance in the light of the judgment of the Court of Appeal in the Moran case receive the allowance to which they are entitled, and that arrears are paid in respect of any underpayment resulting from the interpretation of the law prior to that judgment.

Mr. Major: The application of the judgment is a matter for the independent Attandance Allowance Board who will be issuing guidelines to delegated medical practitioners. We are considering the questions which the hon. Member raises.

Wistons Nursing Home, Brighton

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many occasions during the last 12 months officials of his Department have visited Wistons nursing home, Dyke Road, Brighton, Sussex, in order to monitor the implementation of the Abortion Act and the Infant Life (Preservation) Act.

Mr. Newton: Wistons nursing home has received two visits of inspection under the Abortion Act during the past 12 months.

Childline

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make it his policy to consult the charity Childline to assess the extent to which the demand for help for children who have been sexually abused exceeds the supply in terms of both of the amount and the nature of the help;

(2) what financial support has so far been given to the charity Childline by his Department; and what assurances of support he has given for the future.

Mr. Newton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 30 October 1986 that £50,000 was being made available to help launch Childline; no undertakings have been given for the future, since no further grant application has been received. An official of the Department is an observer on the council set up by Childline to advise the project and a close link is maintained with the organisation.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the annual cost of administering the system of exemptions from prescription charges.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the information required to make a reliable estimate is not available.

Nurses

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider increasing the availability of courses for mothers returning to nursing; if he will further consider what measures he can take to encourage mothers to return to nursing before their children are of school age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: It is for health authorities to match the provision of courses for mothers returning to nursing with the need. Every encouragement is given to authorities to attract qualified nurses to return, but whether mothers with children under school age should be sought particularly is a matter for each authority to decide.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that sufficient consideration is given to advances in technology and patient care in back-to-nursing courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: It is for health authorities to ensure that the content of such courses is appropriate to the needs of the participants, and we would expect them to recognise the importance of advances in technology and patient care.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration has been given to operating a flexible working hours system in the Health Service, enabling nurses with children to work during school hours; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Health authorities already offer opportunities to nursing staff who are unable to work full time. Some 34 per cent. of such staff are employed on a part-time basis. We agree that there my be scope for employing more part-time staff and last June the Acting Chairman of the National Health Service Management Board wrote to Regional General Managers asking them to consider giving more opportunities to part-time working and job sharing. There are however limitations on the extent to which professional jobs can be broken into part-time components and the numbers of staff who can be employed only during school holidays.

Income Support

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning the identification of an element equal to a person's rates payment within income support; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: We have received a number of representations on the effect on income support recipients of the proposal that people should pay a proportion of their general rates. Final decisions about the level of income support have not yet been taken.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is in a position to make a statement about the nature of rate assessment forms for people on income support.

Mr. Lyell: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions he has had with local authority associations concerning the calculation of net income of people on income support; to what effect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The housing benefit standing committee, which consists of representatives of the local authority associations and officials of the Department meets regularly. The committee commissioned a sub-group of its members to examine approaches to the calculation of net income for people receiving housing benefit under the reformed scheme. The sub-group met five times and produced a report setting out options for the treatment of net income. Draft regulations for the reformed scheme taking into account the majority preference for an actual net income approach, were issued to the local authority associations for formal consultation at the beginning of the year. The associations' responses are being considered at present.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received from local authorities seeking 100 per cent. assistance with rates for those who will receive income support, where the authorities meet spending targets set by the Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: I am not aware of any representations specifically making this point. People whose local authorities keep spending down will benefit from having to make a lower contribution towards rates. An arrangement such as that set out in my hon. Friend's question would not be in keeping with our objectives of greater accountability of local authorities to their electorates, equity between people on and off income support or living in different parts of the country, and operational simplicity.

Irradiated Food

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the Government will be announcing their decision on food irradiation following the report from the Advisory Committee on Irradiated and Novel Foods; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on 12 January at column 120. We are still awaiting the further advice of the Advisory Committee on Irradiated and Novel Foods.

Hospitals (Accommodation Sales)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of units of accommodation attached to hospitals that have been sold by each district health authority over the last two years, and the price obtained in each case.

Mrs. Currie: The Department collects information about sales of residential accommodation only by region. Sales in 1985-86 are set out in the following table. Comparable figures for 1986-87 should be available in May.

Region	Number of Residential Units sold	Total proceeds £
Northern	67	1,039,000
Yorkshire	49	844,465
Trent	263	2,660,641

Local Offices (Claims)

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the back-log of claims at the Apollo house office of his Department in Coventry in January 1986, July 1986 and January 1987, respectively.

Mr. Lyell: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

NHS (Hospital and Community Services)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will answer the question on National Health Service hospital and community services from the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey to which the Minister for Health, the hon. Member for Braintree (Mr. Newton), gave a holding reply on 27 February, Official Report, column 449.

Mr. Newton: The information requested in the hon. Member's earlier question is not readily available and is taking some time to compile. Work is in progress and I shall let the hon. Member have as full a reply as is possible as soon as I can.

Hepatitis B

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has plans to encourage all health care staff to be vaccinated against hepatitis B.

Mr. Newton: We are considering the advice to be issued to health authorities on the vaccination of their staff against hepatitis.

Blood Sugar Test Strips

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has yet decided whether to make blood sugar test strips available on prescription; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Blood testing strips will not be made available on general practitioner prescription at present, although that is something we would like to do in due course.

Blood Products

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state the date when his Department gave instructions that all Factor VIII blood products should be heat treated.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the numbers in Dunfermline and Kirkcaldy district social security offices who have received exceptionally severe weather allowances in the current year.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 20 March 1987, c. 667]: Up to 10 March 1987, the latest date for which information is available, the Department's local office in Dunfermline had made 1,913 exceptionally cold weather £5 payments, and the Kirkcaldy office had made 2,929.

National Insurance

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate (i) the revenue effect to the National Insurance Fund of abolition of the upper earnings limit and (ii) the loss to the fund of counting personal allowances for income tax purposes against the employee's liability to contributions.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 12 March 1987, c. 294-95]: If the upper earnings limit for employees' class 1 contributions were removed, but retained for the contracted out rebate, then the National Insurance Fund's income from National Insurance contributions would have been £690 million higher in 1986-87.

If all personal tax allowances, including the married man's allowance, counted against the employee's liability for National Insurance contributions, then the National Insurance Fund's contribution income would have been about £3·75 billion lower in 1986-87.

Nuclear Installations (Cancer)

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he can yet give a firm date for the publication by the Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys of the statistical study of cancer incidence and mortality in the vicinity of nuclear installations in England and Wales.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 18 February 1987, c. 724]: The report "Cancer Incidence and Mortality in the Vicinity of Nuclear Installations England and Wales, 1959-80" was published earlier today in its final form including microfiche tables. Copies are available in the Library.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid

Mr. Bermingham asked the Attorney-General whether there will be any increase in the time taken to process legal aid applications in civil cases as a result of the shortfall of £1·4 million in the sum requested (£27·248 million) to run the legal aid administration in the year 1987-88.

The Attorney-General: The amount allocated for legal aid administration in 1987-88 is £25·465 million. This is 3·4 per cent. higher than the figure for 1986-87 (£24·634 million) which in turn was 18·6 per cent. higher than the figure for 1985-86 (£20·767 million). The legal aid administration of the Law Society estimates that the length of time taken to process civil legal aid applications will increase during 1987-88. The Government are confident that the legal aid administration will do all it can to keep any such increase to the minimum.

Social Security Commissioners

Mr. Best asked the Attorney-General what is the number of social security commissioners and the respective populations served for each of Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland; if he has any proposals to increase the number of social security commissioners for Wales; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: There are 17 commissioners (including two part-time) in Great Britain. For the purpose of this jurisdiction there are no formal divisions between England, Wales and Scotland. At present, however, two commissioners are located in Edinburgh. Commissioners also attend regularly at Cardiff to conduct oral hearings. Steps are being taken to appoint an additional commissioner, to be based in Edinburgh. I understand from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland that there are three commissioners there, but this jurisdiction is separate from that of Great Britain. Latest approximate population figures are:

Wales	2·8
Scotland	5·1
Northern Ireland	1·6

WALES

Research and Development

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to increase research and development in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Most of the research carried out in Wales is funded by research councils, other Government Departments and the private sector. My Department actively encourages the take-up of the funds available and in particular I have established WINTECH, the technology arm of the Welsh Development Agency, to further stimulate industrially orientated research and development.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will report on the steps taken by his Department and the Welsh Development Agency toward implementing the recommendations of the following reports concerning the industrial investment activity of the Welsh Development Agency: Report of the Comptroller and Auditor General, 1985; Welsh Office/Treasury Review, 1987; Public Accounts Committee 7th Report 1986-87.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Progress towards implementing the recommendations made in the 1985 report of the Comptroller and Auditor General on the investment activities of the development agencies is described in the Thirty-Eight report from the Committee of Public Accounts, Session 1984-85, published on 28 October 1985, and in the associated Treasury Minute of February 1986 (Cmnd. 9743).

A number of the recommendations in the Welsh Office/Treasury 1986 review were anticipated by the agency and incorporated into its planning, appraisal and monitoring system. I have discussed the review with the agency's board, and work on an action plan is well in hand.

The Government's response to the Public Accounts Committee's Seventh Report 1986-87 will be made in due course.

Welsh Venture Capital

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been invested by the Welsh Venture Capital fund since its establishment by the Welsh Development Agency in 1985.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Since 1985 Welsh Venture Capital has invested or committed £2,665,000.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the number of hospital beds in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: While it is not disputed that there has been a reduction in the number of hospital beds in Wales, what I cannot agree with are attempts to use bed numbers by themselves as an indicator of the level of health care. Successive Governments have pursued a policy of replacing large numbers of old-fashioned hospitals with new more efficient ones with the potential to provide a higher level of patient care. In this context between 1974 and 1979 there was a decrease of 1,251 beds available in the NHS in Wales. Since 1979, some £490 million has been invested in the capital estate of the hospital and community health service in Wales, and five major hospital developments have been completed in this period, a sixth has been commissioned and there have been many other capital developments in existing hospitals, as well as the building of two new community hospitals. The revenue resources made available to health authorities in Wales have increased by 33 per cent., after allowing for inflation, between 1978-79 and 1987-88.

A decline in bed numbers can actually represent an improvement in levels of care, as in the case of the fall of 996 in the number of mental illness and handicap beds between 1979 and 1985, which is in line with the Government's policy of returning such patients to more appropriate care in the community. Care in the community is also relevant to the acute hospital sector, and developments allowing increased treatment and care at home have contributed to the increase of 76,000 or 22 per cent. in the number of in-patient cases between 1979 and 1985. This additional health care has been supported by the increase of 13·5 per cent. in the numbers of hospital staff directly concerned with patient care between 1979 and 1986.

Chest Consultants

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the number of chest consultants in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: As far as thoracic medicine is concerned, changes in the pattern of chest disease and in clinical practice have led to new methods of dealing with chest disorders, including tuberculosis. The treatment of chest disorders is not the province of one specialty alone. Consultants in general medicine, cardiology, endocrinology, gastroenterology and geriatrics are now also involved. The numbers of consultants in these specialties has increased markedly since 1979. For example, the number in general medicine has increased by 34 per cent. in total (from 56 to 75 posts), and by 20 per cent. in whole-time equivalents (from nearly 53 to above 63).

On matters of this kind, my Department is advised by the Welsh Medical and Dental Manpower Committee, composed of leading members of the medical profession in the Principality. If an authority wished to make any case to increase the number of consultants in thoracic medicine, then the committee would consider it and advise the Department accordingly. The fact that there have been no such bids recently indicates that these needs are properly catered for. The emphasis placed recently on the numbers of chest consultants remaining in Wales takes absolutely no account of the changes in medical practice that have taken place in the last 10 years under successive Governments whereby chest diseases are now treated by consultants with an interest in a range of specialties, which may include thoracic medicine. It should be remembered that this is not a new approach and follows from changes both in the pattern of lung disorders and in treatment. As a result the need for specialised chest consultants is much less than it was 10 years ago.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Local Government Elections

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider introducing legislation to ensure that annual elections to local authorities are held in those local authorities currently elected en bloc every three or four years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no present plans for such legislation. We are considering a recommendation by the Widdicombe committee of inquiry into the conduct of local authority business that all councillors in England and Wales should be elected every four years by whole-council elections based on single-member electoral areas.

Haverigg Prison

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he has plans to enable category C prisoners at Her Majesty's prison, Haverigg, to receive fortnightly visits;

(2) what criteria were used in deciding that category C prisoners at Her Majesty's prison, Haverigg are allowed only one visit per month; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Meller: The frequency of visits to convicted prisoners above the minimum of one visit (of at least half an hour) every four weeks is a matter for the discretion of governors, who are, however, encouraged to permit visits as frequently as circumstances at their establishments allow. At Her Majesty's prison, Haverigg the visits may last up to two hours and additional visits above the minimum are permitted in exceptional circumstances, but fortnightly visits are not practicable.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to increase the number of letters per week which category C prisoners at Her Majesty's prison, Haverigg are allowed to write; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Meller: Under present arrangements inmates at Her Majesty's prison, Haverigg are allowed to send one letter per week at public expense and two letters per week paid for from prison earnings.

Last April the censorship of letters to and from inmates in open establishments was reduced and the restriction on the number of letters which they could send and receive were removed. In the light of experience of these changes we shall be considering in due course how far changes of this kind might be made in category C establishments.

Radioactivity (Contingency Plans)

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the circulars which offer guidance to local authorities who seek to develop contingency plans to mitigate the effects of radioactivity released into the atmosphere from incidents involving the transportation of radioactive weapons materials.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: General advice on accidents involving radioactivity is contained in the "Emergency Planning Guidance to Local Authorities", a copy of which is in the Library.

Electrical Fires

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fires were caused by wiring defects in England and Wales in the last year for which figures are available; and what was the approximate cost of the damage.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In 1984 local authority fire brigades in England and Wales attended 15,949 fires for which electrical wiring was recorded by the brigade as the source of ignition. Of these, 2,845 vehicles and 1,083 in other outdoor locations (excluding more minor outdoor fires, on which brigades do not report information on the cause). These figures for England and Wales correspond to those for the United Kingdom published in tables 34 and 58 of "Fire Statistics United Kingdom, 1984". Information on the financial cost of these fires is not available.

NATO (Committees)

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the terms of reference for each working group of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation Civil Defence Committee; what is the post, rank, and responsibilities of each representative of the United Kingdom on the working group of the Civil Defence Committee; and who attends which working groups.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Civil Defence Committee has a working group which prepares for meetings of the Civil Defence Committee and may discuss any matters relevant to that committee. United Kingdom representation is from F6 (Emergency Planning) Division of the Home Office at grade 5 or 7. It also has two sub-groups of experts which provide more specialised fora for consideration of medical and warning and monitoring matters. The United Kingdom representatives are a senior medical officer in the Department of Health and Social Security and the director of the United Kingdom Warning and Monitoring Organisation (grade 6) respectively.

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the reply of 12 January, Official Report, column 67, why the minutes of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation Civil Defence Committee carry a North Atlantic Treaty Organisation security classification; how many North Atlantic Treaty Organisation security classifications there are; if he will list them; and if he will explain the criteria applied by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation when deciding to place civil defence information under a security classification.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The North Atlantic Treaty Organisation uses four security classifications: restricted, confidential, secret and top secret. The unauthorised disclosure of information in these categories would be increasingly damaging to the Alliance. There are no distinct criteria applicable only to civil defence information.

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the title and duties of the senior employee of British Telecommunications plc who sits on the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation Civil Communications Planning Committee; what meetings, in addition to the annual plenary session, are held by the Civil Communications Planning Committee; and where these meetings take place.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: United Kingdom representation at the Civil Communications Planning Committee is provided by an official at grade 7 from the Home Office directorate of telecommunications. He is supported by a senior member of staff from the Government services division of British Telecom International as occasion demands.

In addition to two plenary sessions of the Committee held annually, working groups of the committee have been meeting up to a total of nine times each year. Meetings are normally held at NATO headquarters in Brussels, but may be held in other locations at the invitation of member states of the Alliance.

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make the minutes of the plenary sessions of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's Civil Communications Planning Committee available in the Library.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The minutes of the Civil Communications Planning Committee carry a NATO security classification.

Radioactivity (Fire Service Guidance)

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the reply of 15 January, Official Report, column 253, when the last review of the June 1984 "Guidance to Fire Service at Incidents Involving Radioactivity" was conducted; if any other specific guidance is issued to chief fire officers in the handling of incidents involving radioactivity arising from the transportation of radioactive weapons' materials; and if any guidance is issued to chief fire officers regarding the procedure for advance notification of the timings and routes of radioactive weapons' materials convoys to specific chief fire officers whose administrative areas are to be passed through.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The guidance on the role of the fire service at incidents involving radioactivity is about to be reviewed. As I indicated in my answer of 15 January, it is the policy of this Government, as it has been of their predecessors, not to comment in detail on the transportation of radioactive weapons materials. There is continuing liaison between representatives of chief fire officers and Ministry of Defence staff about the role of the fire service in the handling of incidents involving radioactive materials.

Radioactivity (Emergency Service Officials)

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the posts, ranks and responsibilities of the senior civil emergency service officials who are briefed on a classified basis on contingency plans at incidents involving radioactive materials.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I do not know to which contingency plans the question refers. The dissemination of any classified information is on a need to know basis and is not determined by rank.

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek powers to direct the Independent Broadcasting Authority to accept advertisements from any publication registered as a newspaper by the General Post Office and accepted as such for the Royal Mail.

Mr. Meller: No. It is for the IBA to decide whether particular advertisements are acceptable for broadcasting in the light of its statutory obligations.

Crime Statistics

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many people with disabilities were the victims of crime against (a) the person and (b) property, in the London borough of Southwark during 1986.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not available.

Prison Officers' Houses, Culcheth

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Warrington, North can expect to receive the information about empty prison officer accommodation at Culcheth which was promised in the answer of 24 February, Official Report, column 155, and 9 March, Official Report, column 28.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested was included in my letter of 17 March, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Bail

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to amend the Bail Act 1976 to provide that bail shall not be granted to any person charged with murder; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Bail Act 1976 establishes a general presumption in favour of bail. The nature and seriousness of the offence are among the matters to which a court must have regard when considering whether any of the exceptions specified in the Act to that general presumption apply. We are looking at the events which led, in a recent case, to the grant of bail to Winston Silcott. We will consider whether there are lessons to be learnt and report any conclusions to the House.

Kidnap Insurance

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is yet in a position to announce proposals for legislation to control and regulate the availability of kidnap insurance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Durham Prison

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many category A women prisoners there were in Her Majesty's prison, Durham; and how many strip searches were made on category A prisoners in Her Majesty's prison, Durham, in February 1987, indicating (a) strip searches before and after consultation with legal advisers, (b) after visits and (c) after cell change, wing search and cell search.

Mr. Mellor: During February there were four category A women prisoners in Durham prison. Strip searches were carried out on women prisoners in this category in the circumstances and on the number of occasions shown:

	Number
After legal visits	Nil
After other visits	5
At the time of cell changes; during wing searches and cell searches	9
TOTAL	14

Shops Act (Prosecutions)

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prosecutions there have been since May 1986 against small, local retailers;

(2) how many prosecutions for contravention of the Shops Act have been made since May 1986.

Mr. Waddington: Information, other than age and sex, is not collected centrally on the characteristics of the defendant in court proceedings; nor is information yet available on the number of court proceedings in 1986.

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to seek to remove the onus for prosecutions for contravention of the Shops Act from local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: We have no plans to do so.

TRANSPORT

Toxic Substances

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy towards the carriage of toxic substances by publicly owned or publicly subsidised ships; if the same provisions apply throughout the private sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Our policy is that all United Kingdom registered merchant ships in normal commercial services must comply with the relevant provisions contained in the Merchant Shipping (Dangerous Goods) Regulations when carrying toxic substances.

No distinction is made in this safety policy, as between publicly owned, publicly subsidised or privately owned ships.

Coaches

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to (a) the number of new express coach services which became available, (b) the level of fares and (c) the volume of passengers before and after the Transport Act 1980.

Mr. David Mitchell: By 1982 the number of regular long distance coach services had increased by some 16 per cent. and fares had been reduced by up to 40 per cent. in real terms. It was estimated that the number of passengers had increased from 15 million a year to 18 million a year.

Commuter Rail Services

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will discuss the quality of commuter services at his next meeting with the chairman of British Rail.

Mr. David Mitchell: The objectives we set for Sir Robert Reid last October emphasised the need to improve its performance so as to achieve the agreed standards for quality of service. Quality is of prime importance to the commuter, and I have asked the board to report to me every quarter on its performance.

NATO (Planning Board for Ocean Shipping)

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply of 13 February, Official Report, columns 554-55, what information he has about the posts held by the two non-governmental officials who represent the United Kingdom on the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation planning board for ocean shipping; who shares joint chairmanship of the planning board for ocean shipping with his Department's director of shipping policy; and what meetings, in addition to the annual plenary session, are held by the planning board for ocean shipping and where these take place.

Mr. Michael Spicer: A senior official of the United States Government is joint chairman of the board. The non-governmental United Kingdom representatives provide technical and specialist expertise to the board and its sub-groups. In addition to the annual plenary sessions of the board held in London and Washington, sub-groups hold meetings in various locations within the member countries of the Alliance.

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make the minutes of the annual plenary session of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's planning board for ocean shipping available in the Library.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. The minutes of the board are treated in confidence, in consistency with the minutes of other NATO planning boards and committees.

East Sussex

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the level of investment by Her Majesty's Government on the road infrastructure in East Sussex.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There has been increasing investment in roads in East Sussex since 1979. Actual and planned expenditure on trunk roads amounts to more than £100 million at 1983 prices. In addition, transport supplementary grants amounting to £4½ million have been awarded to the county council in the past four years, with nearly another £1 million available for the next financial year.

Helicopter Research

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what funds he makes available for helicopter research; and what will be the proposed expenditure in 1987-88.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Civil Aviation Authority is undertaking a three-year programme of research into helicopter safety costing £1·6 million and based upon recommendations made by the helicopter airworthiness requirements panel. It is the Government's policy that the civil aviation industry should normally meet the costs of research. But, exceptionally, my Department is contributing £400,000 towards the cost of this programme, including £165,000 in 1987-88. The Department of Energy, the United Kingdom Offshore Operators Association and the CAA are also contributing.

A3 (Safety)

Mr. David Howell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what further interim measures he proposes to improve safety and reduce traffic speeding on the Guildford to Milford section of the A3 trunk road during the current phase of upgrading to dual carriageway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Construction of the Compton to Shackleford improvement is planned to start later this year.

We are investigating the possibility of interim safety measures as suggested by my right hon. Friend. I shall write to him as soon as I can.

Cash Limits

Mr. William Powell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he proposes to the cash limits on his Votes.

Mr. Moore: As foreshadowed in my statement on 9 March, at column 22, on the Zeebrugge ferry disaster, the Government have made a £1,000,000 (£1 million) contribution to the disaster fund, met by a repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund.

The contribution will add £1,000,000 to Government expenditure, but as savings have occurred in Class VIII, Vote 2, the public expenditure planning total will not itself be affected. The cash limit for Class VIII, Vote 2, in 1986-87 is being reduced from £181,371,000 to £180,371,000.

Parliament will be asked to vote a summer Supplementary Estimate to repay the advance to the Contingencies Fund in 1987-88. As an internal Government financial transfer, this will not affect the planning total of public expenditure in 1987-88. It will, however, be necessary to increase the cash limit for Class VIII, Vote 2, in that year from £190,446,000 to £191,446,000.

Bridges

Mr. Higgins asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to publish the report on the state of bridges in relation to the new bridge assessment code.

Mr. Moore: I am publishing today the report on a sample survey of bridges on local authority roads. A copy has been placed in the Library. I am grateful for the co-operation of all the major public bridge owners and for their help in producing this useful report; I shall now be seeking their comments on the findings.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Ms. Richardson asked the Paymaster General whether he will state for (a) Manchester and (b) the United Kingdom the number and percentage of (i) men and (ii) women who have been deemed unavailable for work; and of these, how many decisions were based upon the person having child care responsibilities.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: some claimants have always been disallowed benefit by independent statutory adjudicating authorities in accordance with long-standing legal rules adopted by successive Governments because they were not available for work. If the hon. Member is asking how many claims have been disallowed in this way since we introduced modified procedures to enforce the rules, the answer as on 27 February 1987 was 72 in the Manchester city council area and 8,866 nationally.

These disallowances represent 0·5 per cent. of all those completing the modified availability form in the Manchester area and 1·1 per cent. nationally. Our records do not separately distinguish between the sexes or those with child care responsibilities.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Strang asked the Paymaster General what are his latest estimates of the current size of the work force in manufacturing industry.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In December 1986 (the latest quarter for which figures are available) there were 5,367,000 employees in employment and self-employed people in the manufacturing industries in Great Britain.

Inflation

Mr. Adley asked the Paymaster General what assessment his Department has made of the effect of inflation on employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Inflation damages the prospects for growth and destroys jobs. The firm financial framework established by this Government has reduced inflation, encouraged growth and led to the generation of over 1 million extra new jobs in this country since spring 1983.

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the median earnings in each case illustrated in the charts at 5.4 of the latest issue of Social Trends.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is shown in the table:

Median of average gross weekly earnings GB April 1985
Full-time employees on adult rates, whose pay was not affected by absence

	Males £	Females £
Industry
Manufacture of motor vehicles and parts thereof	182·8	122·2
Textiles	143·8	92·3
Retail distribution	134·3	87·6
Banking & Finance	221·3	133·9
Education	201·6	164·2

Adult Training

Mr. Thurnham asked the Paymaster General what percentage of the estimated expenditure on adult training at skillcentres by Manchester, north area of the Manpower Services Commission's vocational educational and training group during 1986-87 was authorised following competitive tenders or quotations from other providers of training.

Mr. Lee: None.

All the 1986-87 expenditure on adult training courses in skillcentres in the Manchester, north area of the Manpower Services Commission's vocational educational and training group was authorised following direct discussions between the VETG area manager and the staff in the skills training agency.

Highlands Estate, Hanwell

Mr. Greenway asked the Paymaster General what representations he has received concerning the effects on the health of the residents of the Highlands Estate, Hanwell, W.7, of the discontinuation of the removal of asbestos from their homes by Ealing council; if the Health and Safety Executive proposes to take any action; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I have not received any representations concerning the health of the residents of flats at Highlands Estate, Hanwell, W.7. Inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive have visited the flats and formed the opinion that the temporary cessation of the work does not pose a risk from asbestos to the health of the residents.

ENERGY

Nuclear Power

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will indicate the amount of uranium required to fuel a nuclear power station of 2,000 MW for 20 years, and the volume of spoil associated with the uranium refining in this country;

(2) if he will indicate the reserves of uranium available to the United Kingdom in terms of years if used in (a) thermonuclear power stations and (b) fast-breeder reactors.

Mr. Goodlad: I am advised by the CEGB that, on the basis of average figures for PWRs worldwide and excluding initial cores, 2000 MW of PWR nuclear capacity operating over a 20 year period would require some 6,000 tonnes of natural uranium.

Uranium is imported for use in the United Kingdom either in the form of uranium ore concentrate or as uranium hexafluoride. Chapter 106.24 of the Sizewell report says that about 1 tonne of solid tailings, and up to 5,000 litres of liquid waste, results from the production of 1 to 2 kg of uranium ore concentrate.

Based on the latest OECD/IAEA estimates, low-cost uranium resources are adequate to meet demand well into the next century. Fast reactors can utilise uranium at least 50 times more effectively than thermal reactors.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received concerning the expenditure of public money on the promoting of nuclear power.

Mr. Goodlad: I have received many representations about the importance of informing the public of the facts about the safety of nuclear power and its economic and strategic benefits.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Energy what further initiatives he proposes to take to promote energy efficiency.

Mr. David Hunt: I outlined a programme of 14 energy efficiency initiatives in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash (Mr. Rost) on 26 January, at columns 52-53. These are being pursued with the relevant industries and professions to build upon the success of Energy Efficiency Year and to achieve further progress with the programmes and schemes of the Energy Efficiency Office.

United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority

Mr. Harris asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has set objectives for the new chairman of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have settled objectives with the UKAEA chairman, Mr. John Collier, on the following terms.

General

Now that the authority has become a trading fund following the enactment of the Atomic Energy Authority Act 1986, you should ensure that it operates on a fully commercial basis while discharging its continuing responsibilities to me and to Parliament.

The authority's principal business remains to carry out research and development on the application of nuclear energy for civil purposes in the United Kingdom. The authority will also undertake other functions agreed with the Government consistent with the Atomic Energy Authority Act 1954, the Science and Technology Act 1965, the Atomic Energy Authority Act 1986, and any other relevant legislation; one such function will be to distribute information on nuclear power. Within these limits I expect you to seek out new customers in both the nuclear and non-nuclear fields so as to exploit the authority's assets and expertise to the full. You should ensure the authority's organisation is appropriate for achieving these tasks.

Subject to the acknowledged need for the authority to carry out a modest programme of longer-term underlying research, defined customer-contractor relationships should apply as far as possible to all the authority's work, including that undertaken for the Department of Energy. All work for customers whether nuclear or non-nuclear should be undertaken only on the basis of an adequate return. The authority's charges to customers may include a contribution towards its underlying research programme.

You should continue to take all reasonable steps to foster the exploitation by United Kingdom industry of technology developed by the authority, including joint ventures where possible.

Nuclear Work for the Department of Energy

To meet the Department's requirements for R and D in the nuclear field you will be asked, each year, to put forward, for agreement with the Department, a programme letter for each area of its declared interest. These should include specific objectives and programmes of work, resources required, timescales and priorities. These programme letters will provide the basis for the Department's funding.

You should ensure that the authoity has in place mechanisms for verifying the quality of the work carried out under the programme letters, and for maximising the efficiency with which that work is executed. You should also ensure that the authority reviews regularly the scope of the work being undertaken or proposed to meet programme letter objectives, with a view to ensuring that the work programmes are the most economical way of meeting those objectives.

You should on behalf of the authority, and within the above framework, continue to provide me with advice and information on matters connected with nuclear energy, in the United Kingdom and abroad, on the authority's work, and on any other areas of authority expertise. I shall in particular continue to place the highest value upon the authority's independent expertise in questions connected with nuclear safety.

Safety

You should ensure that the authority continues to have arrangements which secure the highest standards of safety at all times both in its day-to-day activities and in the management of radioactive waste. You should continue to be guided by the Secretary of State's direction of 1 April 1960, the sense of which (allowing for subsequent changes in responsibilities) is that the authority should have regard as far as practicable to any current safety requirements ordinarily imposed by the NII on licensed operators.

Financial

I expect you to use your best endeavours to ensure that the authority lives within its EFL as from time to time agreed.

I expect you to use your best endeavours to ensure that the financial target, as set by me from time to time after discussion with the authority is achieved. (The agreed target for the three financial years 1 April 1986 to 31 March 1989 is a return, averaged across the period, 5 per cent. a year in the form of a current cost operating surplus expressed as a percentage of average current cost capital employed). I also expect to require you to surrender distributions of agreed sums from time to time to the Consolidated Fund.

You should provide the Department annually with a medium-term corporate plan covering the PES period and taking account as appropriate of the likely development of each of the main business areas over the next 10 years. The plan should include a capital investment memorandum setting out the authority's capital expenditure proposals. The overall plan should be formulated within the framework of longer-term organisational aims and objectives as determined by strategic reviews carried out by the authority and as indicated in this letter.

Efficiency

You should ensure that the authority attaches particular importance to the control of costs, increasing efficiency and the economical use of resources including private sector resources where appropriate. You should continue to investigate in liaison with the Department the development of suitable performance aims complementary to the financial target.

PRIME MINISTER

Private Offices (Information)

Q. 129 Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister what instructions are given to the private offices of Government Ministers in relation to reporting to Ministers information given to them by police forces.

The Prime Minister: None.

Bain and Company

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister what was the purpose of her recent lunch with Sir Jack Lyons and Bain and Company; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The purpose of the lunch which I attended at Bain and Company on 7 January was to discuss the economy. It was attended by more than 40 people, most of whom were neither directors nor employees of Bain.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Prime Minister if she will make the gathering of information on ethnic origins compulsory, and publish the percentage of entrants to the Cabinet Office who failed to respond to the ethnic origins questionnaire.

The Prime Minister: Surveys of the ethnic origin of staff in post and new entrants to the Civil Service have been carried out in agreement with the Council of Civil Service Unions on the basis of voluntary self-classification. There are no plans at present to change to a compulsory system. However, the Civil Service and the Council of Civil Service Unions are keen to improve the data base and are discussing practical ways in which this can be done.

Information on response rates in the existing new entrant surveys is not readily available. For example, new entrants to the Cabinet Office include both recruits to the service and those joining on loan from other Government Departments. The number for whom ethnic origin data is not currently held should fall as data are transferred from parent Departments. Service-wide response rates to staff-in-post surveys have averaged 70 per cent. Applicant surveys have had higher response rates of 80 to 95 per cent. Departments will shortly start a comprehensive programme of applicant monitoring and this should help to improve the new entrant data base.

All the arrangements for ethnic origin monitoring are kept under review jointly by the Management and Personnel Office, Departments and the Council of Civil Service Unions. The objective is to increase the effectiveness of the implemenation of equal opportunity policy.

The results of the surveys will be published. Reports on the first phase of recruitment monitoring and the London and south-east and East Anglia staff-in-post surveys will be published later this year.

Engagements

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 24 March.

Mr. Leigh asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 24 March.

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 24 March.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 24 March.

Mr. Janner asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 24 March.

Mr. Duffy asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 24 March.

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 24 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. I was also present at Victoria to mark the arrival of King Fahd. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I shall be attending a state banquet in honour of King Fahd.

Ministers (Correspondence)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister what has been the average number of letters received by all Ministers each year since 1979 from right hon. and hon. Members.

The Prime Minister: Information in the form requested is not available and could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

SCOTLAND

Licensing Hours

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information his Department has collected, since the relaxation of licensing hours in Scotland, about the number of extensions granted for different times of day.

Mr. Lang: The central collection of liquor licensing statistics ceased in 1981; before then the only figures collected related to the numbers and types of licences issued, not to regular or occasional extensions.

Woodilee Hospital

Mr. Martin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when patients at Woodilee hospital were transferred to temporary accommodation as a result of structural defects; where they are currently being cared for; what plans he has for the construction of suitable short-term temporary accommodation; when he expects the existing buildings at Woodilee to be fit for re-occupation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Following the recommendation of a consultant structural engineer on Friday 13 March that the safety of the patients accommodated in the main block of Woodilee hospital was at risk, all the patients in that block were transferred over the following two days to alternative temporary accommodation at Woodilee hospital itself and at Stoneyetts, Gartloch, Stobhill, Leverndale, Ruchill and Mearnskirk hospitals. Since then, some of the patients at Mearnskirk have been transferred to the David Elder infirmary; further transfers may be made if other more suitable accommodation can be brought into use.

The consultant engineer is currently engaged on a further more detailed survey of the main block at Woodilee. Once his full report and supplementary building advice is available the greater Glasgow health board will be considering, in consultation with the Scottish Home and Health Department, whether the main block can and should be brought back into use and alternative options.

My right hon. and learned Friend is concerned that this situation has arisen but commends the speed with which the health board acted in response to the structural engineer's advice.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Shorter-Range Nuclear Forces

53. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest developments in negotiations on shorter-range nuclear forces in Europe.

55. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had about the possibility of including short-range intermediate nuclear forces in any imminent treaty.

Mr. Eggar: There are currently no separate negotiations betwen the United States and Soviet Union on shorter-range systems. It has been, however, part of NATO's position for many years that within an agreement on longer-range intermediate nuclear forces there should be constraints on those short-range systems which could circumvent such an agreement and a United States right to match. NATO has also agreed that the overall imbalance in shorter range systems must be addressed in follow-on negotiations.

ABM Treaty

54. Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his assessment of the implications for United Kingdom policy on defence of United States policy towards the interpretation of the anti-ballistic missile treaty.

Mr. Eggar: United States policy on the interpretation of the anti-ballistic missile treaty is a matter for the United States Administration. They have made it clear that any change in policy would be a matter for consultations with us. The implications for our defence policy would be an important element in such consultations. The United States Administration are fully aware that we share their wish to see an arms race in outer space prevented and to work towards the success of the Geneva nuclear and space talks.

WEU Meeting

56. Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what issues will be discussed at the meeting of the Western European Union on 27 to 28 April.

Mr. Eggar: At their meeting next month in Luxembourg, Western European Union Foreign and Defence Ministers will discuss issues relating to European security and progress in Western European Union reactivation.

Intermediate Nuclear Weapons

57. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received regarding reductions in intermediate nuclear weapons.

Mr. Eggar: The negotiations between the United States and Soviet Union on longer-range intermediate nuclear forces are continuing in Geneva. I have nothing further to report from the answer that my right hon. and learned Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester) on 18 March at column 918.

Chemical Weapons Treaty

58. Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response the United States has given to the challenge inspection proposal outlined by the United Kingdom for the verification of a chemical weapons treaty.

Mr. Eggar: The United States has made clear its willingness to consider any approach that provides a level of effectiveness equivalent to that of its own proposals on challenge inspection. The United Kingdom proposal remains under discussion among delegations in the chemical weapons negotiations in Geneva.

KMS Ltd.

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the nature of the employment of KMS Ltd. by his Department in 1982; and if he has any evidence that British subjects working for KMS are operating in (a) an operational or (b) a training role in Sri Lanka.

Mr. Eggar: KMS Ltd. was employed by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office from May to August 1982 to provide close protection to Her Majesty's ambassador in Montevideo.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has not employed KMS since then. We understand that KMS employs British citizens under a private commercial contract with the Sri Lankan Government to provide training services to its security forces. As a commercial company it contracts to provide services and is not controlled by Her Majesty's Government. We have throughout emphasised to KMS and to the Sri Lankan Government alike our clear view that British subjects should be involved only in training, and should certainly not be engaged in military operations of any kind in Sri Lanka.

Soil Survey

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will give the total number of staff employed annually by the Soil Survey from 1979; and if he will give the projection for the next two years.

Mr. Walden: The information requested is as follows:

	Number
1979	80
1980	79
1981	78
1982	78
1983	78
1984	78
1985	75
1987	40

Subject to the negotiation of satisfactory terms, the Agricultural and Food Research Council and Cranfield Institute of Technology have agreed that the Soil Survey and Land Resource Centre should be transferred to Cranfield during 1987. It will be for Cranfield to determine staffing levels beyond 1987.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the establishment of a city technology college in Thamesmead.

Mrs. Rumbold: My hon. Friend will be aware that there is considerable local interest in the possibility of establishing a city technology college in Thamesmead, which he has done much to encourage. We would gladly look at any proposals which emerge.

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science to whom the governing bodies of city technology colleges will be financially accountable.

Mrs. Rumbold: The governing bodies of city technology colleges will be financially accountable to those who fund them. They will be accountable to the Secretary of State in respect of grant received from the Department, and to their private sector sponsors for funding made available by them.

Senile Dementia

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what work is being sponsored by the Medical Research Council into the biological causes of senile dementia; and if he will make a progress report.

Mr. Walden: The Medical Research Council is supporting 20 projects into the biological causes of senile dementia. I will write to my hon. Friend with details. Progress in this work will continue to be reported in the scientific literature.

Student Grants

Mr. David Howell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will now arrange for London weighting to be applied to the grants received by students attending the University of Surrey in Guildford.

Mr. Walden: No.

Children (Special Needs)

Mrs. Shields asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what guidance he gives to local authorities on spending on teacher training for children with special needs;

(2) what action he plans to take to ensure that teachers of children with special needs have sufficient training.

Mrs. Rumbold: Training for teachers of children with special needs will be a national priority under the local education authority training grants scheme for 1987-88 as described in the Department's circular 6/86. As such, this training is eligible for grant at the higher rate of 70 per cent. within the amounts of expenditure notified to local education authorities; additional expenditure is eligible for 50 per cent. grant under the scheme.

My right hon. Friend will also be taking the training needs of these teachers into consideration when determining the arrangements for the scheme in 1988-89.

Teachers' Superannuation Fund

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science for each of the past five years, what has been the excess of income over expenditure for the teachers' superannuation fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: There is no teachers' superannuation fund and consequently there are no cash surpluses. Teachers' and employers' contributions are paid into the Consolidated Fund and benefits are paid out of moneys voted by Parliament. An account is maintained of receipts and payments under the Teachers' Superannuation Regulations 1976 (as amended) or under previous provisions. The balance in the account and any excess of receipts over payments each year are deemed to be invested in Government securities and interest added accordingly to the account. These notional investments are selected by the Secretary of State after consultation with the Government Actuary.

Copies of the accounts for 1981-82 to 1984-85 are in the Library. A copy of the account for 1985-86 will be placed in the Library in the next few days.

Schools (Homework)

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will publish the findings of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools survey into good practices in schools in relation to homework.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The inspectorate's report on its limited inspection of the extent, nature and quality of homework in all types of school has been published today. The report draws attention to examples of good practice. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

Her Majesty's inspectors found that the potential of homework as part of the learning process was not being fully exploited in many schools. Its most successful use was where it was interpreted and implemented flexibly as part of the school's policy for the curriculum which was understood by staff, pupils and parents, and where it was clearly related to other teaching and learning approaches. Other hallmarks of good practice included high-quality assignments to pupils which were appropriate to their age and ability; and use of the opportunity to develop skills of independent learning and to make the most of the local environment. Good practice also depended upon enlisting the constructive support of parents and other adults.

The findings confirm the Government in their view that appropriately set and marked homework valuably reinforces work in the classroom. It can support the objectives of the school curriculum in a number of ways, for example by extending the pupils' day and by giving individual pupils work which is matched to their ability. But it is also clear that parents have a central role to play in co-operating with teachers to ensure that homework is done and to get best value out of it for their children. Too often parents ignore their responsibilities, allow TV to take precedence over homework, and fail to make the contribution they might to raising standards in schools.

I hope that, in discharging their responsibilities for the curriculum under the Education (No. 2) Act 1986, local education authorities, governing bodies and head teachers will consider carefully the findings of this report and will review the place of homework in the work of their schools. Every local education autho ity and school should have a policy for homework as part of its policy for the curriculum as a whole. It should state clearly what is expected of parents in order to make homework an effective contribution to their child's education. The policy should offer guidance on the amount, range and character of homework which should be expected of pupils at different ages and abilities in both the primary and secondary stages. It should recognise the different needs of pupils and the importance of homework being properly assessed in ways that are helpful and constructive for the individual pupil; and it should give guidance on ways of helping pupils whose home circumstances make it difficult for them to study at home.

I shall take account of the report's conclusions in the proposals I am developing for a national school curriculum.

Capital Allowances

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing, for each year, 1982-83 onwards, an analysis of capital allocations each year expressed as a percentage of expenditure bids submitted, broken down between (a) local education authorities in Greater London, (b) metropolitan district education authorities outside Greater London and (c) non-metropolitan county education authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 12 March 1987, c. 260.]: The information requested for the years 1984-85 to 1987-88 is given in the following table. Authorities were not asked for cash plans for 1982-83 or 1983-84, so percentage figures cannot be given for those years.

THE ARTS

Theatre Audiences

Mr. Wareing asked the Minister for the Arts what representations he has had about possible initiatives to widen the audience for theatre.

Mr. Luce: The recent report to the Arts Council on the theatre in England looked inter alia, at widening the audience; I look forward to receiving the council's views. The Arts Council already includes in its criteria for the allocation of grant the extent of an arts body's commitment to attracting wider audiences. My new arts marketing scheme will, I hope, also encourage many arts bodies to produce imaginative ideas for improving their marketing.

Industrial Archaeology

Mr. Adley asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on his arts policy priorities insofar as they relate to industrial archaeology.

Mr. Luce: I am pleased to report that many museums in both public and private sectors are active in the field of industrial archaeology and liaise with other organisations which have interests in this area.

CIVIL SERVICE

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Minister for the Civil Service if he will make the gathering of information on ethnic origins compulsory and publish the percentage of entrants to the Privy Council Office who failed to respond to the ethnic origins questionnaire.

Mr. Luce: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister today, which also applies to the staff of the Privy Council.

NATIONAL FINANCE

VAT

Mr. Dykes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the scheme of value added tax scale charges for fuel used by businesses for private motoring will apply to vehicles other than cars.

Mr. Brooke: No. Although the legislation in the Finance Act 1986 is widely drawn, the derogation for which application was made under article 27 of the sixth VAT directive was confined to cars and there will therefore be no change in the VAT treatment of road fuel used by businesses for private journeys in vehicles other than cars. However, Customs will be keeping the operation of the scheme under review and any changes found to be necessary will be announced in due course.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the most recent year for which figures are available, the revenue from capital gains tax and the amount collected on the disposal of (a) shares and (b) real property; and if he will give separate figures for the personal sector.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The estimated receipts in 1986-87 are £1,050 million from capital gains tax and £650 million from tax on capital gains within corporation tax. Capital gains tax applies to gains realised by individuals and trusts and corporation tax to gains realised by companies.

Virtually all of the tax yield is derived from disposals of shares and real property, with 50 to 60 per cent. of the total from shares.

Government Data Network

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will describe the types of studies that were undertaken to plan the Government data network; and whether he will place these studies in the Library.

Mr. Brooke: Planning Government telecommunications is an evolutionary process. The current proposals for the Government data network derive from the data communications recommendations of the "Eosys" Study. Extracts from that study and the Government's response were published in 1984 as "Strategic Study of Government Administrative Telecommunications", IT series No. 5. A copy is in the Library. Follow-up work included a major study, by PACTEL, in 1985, of "Non-Telephony Administrative Telecommunications Needs", which was distributed and discussed among Departments. I have placed a copy in the Library. Those studies envisaged an integrated Government network for both speech and data transmission, developing incrementally as a longer-term objective. Other work has been done by individual Departments to determine their telecommunications strategies and requirements. The proposals for a Government data network are one way of making the first step towards an integrated network.

Launderettes

Dr. Glyn asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from organisations representing the owners and operators of launderettes about the effect of value added tax on launderettes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: My colleagues and I have received four letters from two hon. Members about various aspects of the VAT treatment of launderettes.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to his reply of 9 February, Official Report, columns 31-32, concerning the rate of exchange between sterling and the European currency unit, he will update the appropriation figures in table C and convert European currency units to sterling for the years 1984-86 at the average rates for sterling against the European currency unit in the European monetary system and for 1987 at the average for this year to date.

Mr. Brooke: It is not possible to update the appropriation figures in table C because the relevant figures for 1986 will not become available until the European Court of Auditors report for 1986 is published towards the end of this year. Average exchange rates between sterling and the European currency unit have been used up to 1985 in table C. The average exchange rate for 1986 was £1 = 1·489 ecu. The average exchange rate for 1987 until the end of February was £1 = 1·353 ecu.

Pensions

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, following his Budget proposals, any of the pension rights secured by additional voluntary contributions can be commuted into a tax-free lump sum, whether any restrictions will apply only to contributions paid after 17 March 1987 regardless of when the arrangements to pay such contributions was entered into; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

MV Silver Sea

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his reply of 13 March, Official Report, columns 319-20, about MV Silver Sea on what date Her Majesty's Customs and Excise began its inquiries; when he expects the inquiries to be completed; and whether he will place a copy of any report on the conclusion of the inquiries in the Library.

Mr. Peter Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 23 March 1987]: It is not the practice of Customs and Excise to disclose details of operational matters while inquiries are continuing. I shall consider how far it might be appropriate to publish the results of these inquiries, once they are complete.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Joint Space Station

52. Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement on proposals for a joint space station.

Mr. Pattie: This would be premature at the moment. Since President Reagan invited the United Kingdom and other member states of the European Space Agency to join the United States of America in building a manned space station, studies have been proceeding on the elements that Europe might provide and on how we should use the space station to maximum benefit. The results of these studies are due later this year and only then will decisions be possible on whether to proceed into the development stage and with what goals.

Regional Aid

Mr. William Powell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will list in the Official Report the amounts and recipients of regional development grants and regional selective assistance amongst companies in the Corby travel-to-work Area since 1 May 1979.

Chrome Ore

Mr. Blair asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the quantity, and reason for disposal, of chrome ore which had been held in stockpiles of strategic materials.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn) on 3 November 1986, at column 312, concerning the Government's policy on the maintenance of supplies of strategic minerals. It remains the Government's policy not to confirm details of individual transactions relating to the strategic mineral stockpile given the commercially sensitive nature of the information concerned.

United States (Exports)

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has for each of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries as to the value of exports per capita in United States dollars in (a) manufactured goods and (b) services, including oil, in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is in the following table:

Steel Industry

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to how many persons were employed in the steel industries of each of the European Economic Community member states in 1979; and how many are now employed.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Employment in ECSC production at the end of 1979 and end of November 1986, the latest period for which complete figures are available, is as follows:

Imported Alcoholic Drinks (Japan)

Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the GATT panel inquiring into the treatment of Japan of imported alcoholic drinks is to have its first meeting; and what is the nature of the evidence being submitted to it by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Community presented its outline case to the GATT on 18 March. The panel will hold its initial meeting on 28 April. The Government have liaised with and supported the Scotch whisky industry and the European Commission in the presentation of detailed evidence of Japanese discrimination against imported alcoholic drinks and will continue to do so.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to what percentage of the European market for chlorofluorocarbons is accounted for by British manufacturers.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I regret that this information is commercially confidential.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether there are any other significant uses for halons in the United Kingdom, apart from in fire extinguishers.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No; over 99 per cent. of halons are used in the controls of fires.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he is taking to ensure that alternatives to fully halogenated chlorofluorocarbons are developed by British manufacturers.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is open to British manufacturers to apply for grants, under the support for innovation scheme, towards the cost of developing new alternatives to chlorofluorocarbons.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to how many aerosol units containing chlorofluorocarbons are sold annually in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I regret this information is not available.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation requiring aerosol manufacturers to label those capisters which use chlorofluorocarbons as a proportion of their propellant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Government are participating in the United Nations environment programme discussions to decide on measures to control production of chlorofluorocarbons. In these circumstances, I consider a requirement for labelling of aerosol cans to indicate that they contain chlorofluorocarbons would be otiose.

Investment Business (Conduct Rules)

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive from the Director General of Fair Trading his report on the proposed rules regarding the conduct of investment business submitted by the Securities and Investments Board on 10 February.

Mr. Channon: I have now received the Director General's report, and have placed a copy in the Library. The Director General concludes that certain of the proposed rules would have a significant anti-competitive effect. The Financial Services Act 1986 precludes transfer of powers under it to a designated agency unless I am satisfied that any significant anti-competitive effect is necessary in the interests of investors. In reaching this decision I will have regard not only to the Director General's reports, but also to other representations made to me, which should be sent to the Department by 10 April.

Devonport Dockyard

Mr. Hicks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will state the specific measures that his Department has taken to alleviate the adverse economic and social effects for the Plymouth travel-to-work area resulting from the projected job reductions at Her Majesty's dockyard, Devonport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 23 March 1987, c. 22]: Regional selective assistance is available from my Department for manufacturing and service projects in the Plymouth travel-to-work area which create or safeguard employment and are of identifiable regional and national benefit. Investment support is also available under several national schemes.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Desmond and Sons Ltd

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement outlining what steps he has taken to monitor the performance of the new cutting room at Desmond and Sons Ltd, Drumahoe, factory since his visit; and what assessment he has made of the company's progress towards achieving the goals outlined to him on that visit.

Mr. Viggers: My right hon. Friend visited the Drumahoe factory on 2 July 1986 to attend the official opening of the company's computerised warehouse and distribution centre. He was taken on a tour of the total facility at Drumahoe, including the cutting room, which had been opened in early 1985. No discussion took place during that visit regarding the performance of the cutting room and no goals for it were outlined to him.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement outlining what information was made available to him prior to the closure of the cutting room at Desmond and Sons Ltd., Drumahoe, regarding the company's decision.

Mr. Viggers: The company informed the Industrial Development Board in early Februry 1987 that it had excess cutting capacity and was starting consultations with the trade union representatives to discuss this problem.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement detailing what grants or loans from public funds and through public agencies were made to Desmond and Sons Ltd, in respect of the new technology introduced to the cutting room at its Drumahoe plant, indicating the specific items for which each element of aid was given; and what considerations particularly regarding employment levels determined the decision to give such aid.

Mr. Viggers: In November 1984 Desmond and Sons Ltd. accepted an offer of selective financial assistance from the Industrial Development Board towards the renewal of employment at the company's undertaking at Drumahoe for administration, warehousing and manufacture of light clothing. The total package of assistance offered amounted to £2,525,500, consisting of building; machinery and equipment and employment grants. The offer was not broken down over the various departments at Drumahoe. However, based on the expenditure to be incurred in the cutting room and the number of people employed there, it is estimated that £355,000 of grants could be attributed to that facility.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement outlining what assistance from public funds and public agencies has been given to each plant in Desmond and Sons Ltd. over the past five years, or is currently earmarked for the coming financial year, and detailing also all the equipment or development for which such aid has been granted.

Mr. Viggers: During the last five financial years assistance totalling £973,005 has been given by the Department of Economic Development and the Clothing Industry Training Board and selective financial assistance of £9,700,000 offered by the Industrial Development Board to Desmond and Sons Ltd.

The following amounts represent assistance from the youth training programme, formally the youth opportunities programme; key training activity and industrial placement support through the Clothing Industry Training Board; key workers scheme; young workers scheme; job introduction scheme and management development programme. These figures cannot however be broken down to identify assistance given to individual factories.

Standard capital grant payment related to machinery and/or equipment at the various sites.

Since March 1982 the Industrial Development Board has offered the company the following selective financial assistance.

Location	Total amount offered (£)	Purpose
New buildings, Springtown Omagh and Dungiven (Outwear Division)	3,087,500	Expansion of jackets trousers and jeans manufacture
Drumahoe, Claudy and Swatragh (Nightwear Division)	4,815,000	Re-equipment of pyjama and dressing gown operation plus new centralised warehouse
Enniskillen and Irvinestown (Leisurewear Division)	1,797,500	Establishment of operation for leisurewear manufacture

At present it is estimated that approximately £180,000 of grant will be given to the company, in respect of the youth training programme and the YTP work scheme, and approximately £15,000 in respect of the training and employers premises scheme, but estimates for payments under other schemes are not available.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he plans to take any action in the light of the closure of the Desmond and Sons Ltd. cutting room at Drumahoe following the installation of new technology with assistance from public funds; what information he has about the likely scale of redundancies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: Under the terms of the IDB offer of assistance if, within four years of installation, the company does not use any item of machinery or equipment for a period exceeding six months, the IDB has the right to demand repayment of the grant paid on that machinery.

Desmond and Sons Ltd. has informed the IDB that the cutting room at Drumahoe was closed on 27 February 1987, resulting in 16 redundancies. This was a commercial decision, for which the company was responsible.

IDB will monitor the situation to ensure that all terms and conditions relating to the payment of grant are met.

Landlords

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement regarding the enforcement of articles 54 and 56 of the Rent (Northern Ireland) Order 1978, indicating what responsibility the Department of the Environment or the Royal Ulster Constabulary exercise in the prosecution of landlords who illegally evict or harass tenants and if he will detail any record of involvement by his Department or the police in such prosecutions or other aspects of enforcement of these articles.

Mr. Needham [pursuant to his reply, 20 March 1987, c. 659]: Neither the Department of the Environment nor the RUC takes action to enforce articles 54 and 56 of the Rent (Northern Ireland) Order 1978, but cases of eviction or harassment involving offences such as breach of the peace, criminal assault or intimidation are investigated by the RUC. Details of such cases are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Benefits (Claimants)

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims were received by Peckham, Camberwell, Southwark and Kennington Department of Health and Social Security supplementary benefit offices for single payments in respect of the exceptionally severe weather in January 1987; how many of these claims have been processed; and how many are outstanding.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the form requested. However, up to 24 February 1987—the latest date for which figures are available—the number of exceptionally cold weather £5 payments made and the number of claims refused by the Peckham, Camberwell, Southwark, Kennington and Oval offices were as follows:

Local office	Number of payments	Number refused
Peckham	2,006	266
Camberwell	1,854	157
Southwark	3,162	311
Kennington Park	2,988	440
Kennington (Oval)	1,136	244

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of claimants at the Peckham, Southwark, Camberwell and Kennington Department of Health and Social Security supplementary benefit offices who were entitled to severe weather payments actually claimed for the payments in January of this year.

Mr. Major: This information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Breast and Cervical Cancer

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to improve screening of women in the London borough of Waltham Forest for breast cancer and cervical cancer.

Mrs. Currie: Funds will be provided for a national breast cancer screening service to be established in England over the next three years on the basis of centres each serving a population of approximately half a million. It is for regional health authorities to decide in which districts the centres should be located and how the special allocations provided to establish them should be deployed.

As far as cervical screening is concerned, I understand that a computerised call-recall system will be implemented in the spring of 1988 by the Redbridge and Waltham Forest family practitioner committee and that call will then commence from women aged 20. A named person will be appointed in overall charge of the cervical screening programme as soon as possible.

Prison Visits

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the cost of providing support for visits to prisoners by their fiancées in line with that given to spouses.

Mr. Major: As well as assisting spouses, the prison visiting scheme also enables payments to be made to common-law spouses where the couple had lived together as man and wife for a substantial period or where they have a child. As information about the relationship between prisoners and those wishing to visit them is not collected centrally, it is not possible to estimate the cost of extending this assistance to fiancées.

Local Offices (Staff)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the average annual rate of turnover of staff in the Department of Health and Social Security offices dealing directly with the public for each of the last five years; and how the rate differed between clerical grades and executive grades.

Mr. Lyell: The following figures give the total number of local office staff leaving the Department in each grade in each of the years 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986. This number is then expressed as a percentage of the total local office staff in post at 1 April in each year. These figures are not available before 1983. Executive grades are principal, senior executive officer, higher executive officer and local officer I. Clerical grades are local officer II and clerical assistant.

Senile Dementia

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress is being made in the clinical treatment of senile dementia; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: There are a number of Medical Research Council units around the country looking at different aspects of senile dementia, but as yet there is no treatment which is able to prevent, arrest or reverse the process. Nor has any treatment been satisfactorily shown to improve brain function in people who are dementing.

At the present time the main aims of clinical treatment include treating any co-existing physical or mental illlnesses or disabilities which could accentuate the effects of dementia; using behavioural and living skill techniques to diminish behaviour problems and to enable people to live as independently as possible; and giving support and counselling to families and other carers.

Youth Suicide

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the annual youth suicide rate since 1980.

Mrs. Currie: The information is given in the table.

Disabled People

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many registered disabled persons are living in the borough of Southwark;

(2) what information he has as to the proportion of disabled people who are house-bound in the London borough of Southwark;

(3) what information he has as to how many people with disabilities who live in the London borough of Southwark are of working age.

Mr. Major: The information available centrally relates to the numbers of disabled persons by age registered with Southwark social services department as being blind, partially sighted, deaf, hard of hearing or physically handicapped. This information does not distinguish those who are house-bound. This information is not a reliable guide to the numbers of disabled persons as registration is voluntary and the registers may lag in reflecting migration or deaths. People with multiple handicaps may also be on more than one register. The latest available data are given in the table.

London Borough of Southwark

	(As at 31 March)	Total	Aged 16-64
Numbers of persons registered as
Blind:	(1986)	879	166
Partially sighted:	(1986)	457	89

Immersion Hypothermia

Mr. David Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what research work is being funded by public resources in the United Kingdom on the subject of immersion hypothermia in drowning.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mobility Allowance

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children in the London borough of Southwark are in receipt of mobility allowance.

Mr. Major: I regret that this information is not available.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects a reply will be sent to the letter from the Disablement Income Group to the Minister for Social Security and the Disabled, dated 11 December 1986 relating to mobility allowance.

Mr. Major: I wrote to the Disablement Income Group on 3 February.

Medical Act 1983 (Amendment) Bill

Dr. M. S. Miller asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received which are unfavourable to the passage of the Medical Act 1983 (Amendment) Bill; and if he will place copies of any such representations in the Library.

Mr. Newton: The General Medical Council has consistently made clear that it would not find the additional powers which the Bill would confer helpful in fulfilling its primary function of protecting the public. The council's views were set out in a note sent to all hon. Members by its president under cover of a letter dated 6 June 1984. Copies will be placed in the Library. We have received no other representations unfavourable to the passage of the Bill.

Family Income Supplement

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations have been received urging the Department not to appeal against the decision of the tribunal which adjudicated on 16 December that the child care costs incurred by a working mother with a child and no husband could be set aside in the calculation of the amount of family income supplement due to her; what decision the Department has taken on the question of an appeal; and what reply was sent to those who made representations.

Mr. Major: The matter of an appeal to the Social Security Commissioner against a decision by a social security appeal tribunal is one for the independent adjudication officer and not for the Department. I understand that the adjudication officer applied to the Commissioner on 26 February for leave to appeal to him against the tribunal's decision. As far as we are aware, no representations urging against such an appeal have been received.

Severe Disability Premium

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects a reply will be sent to the letters from the Disablement Income Group to the Minister for Social Security and the Disabled dated 3 August and 29 December 1986, relating to the severe disability premium.

Mr. Major: I replied to the letter dated 3 August on 4 November. In response to the letter dated 29 December I met representatives from the Disablement Income Group and other organisations on 21 January and wrote again on 4 February.

Pharamaceutical Industry (Expenditure)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated annual expenditure by the pharmaceutical industry on (a) drug promotion and (b) research.

Mr. Newton: The information we hold is derived from annual financial returns submitted for the purposes of the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme by the 65 largest companies supplying medicines for use in the National Health Service. In 1984, the relevant expenditure by those companies was £146 million on promotion and £282 million on research and development.

Drug Consumption

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of adults are estimated to be taking in a typical week (a) prescribed drugs and (b) prescribed or non prescribed drugs.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not collected by the Department.

Drugs (Advertisements)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the regulatory requirements placed upon the pharmaceutical industry with regard to the advertising of their products;

(2) what use has been made of powers under section 95(1) of the Medicines Act 1968 to prohibit advertising relating to specified classes of drugs.

Mr. Newton: Under the Medicines Act 1968 it is an offence to issue false or misleading advertisements and advertising has to be consistent with the product licences governing the marketing of particular medicines.

The relevant subordinate legislation is as follows:

Reference	Brief Description and Effect
SI 1972 No. 2076	Form and content of data sheets.

Reference	Brief Description and Effect
SI 1975 No. 298[1]	Restrictions on advertisements for medicines with product licences or right.
SI 1975 No. 1326	Advertisements to be consistent with data sheets; other data sheets provision.
SI 1978 No. 41[1]	Governing advertisements of medicines to the public.
SI 1978 No. 1020	Format of advertisements to medical and dental practitioners.
SI 1979 No. 1760	Application to contact lens fluids.

[1] Made under S95(1) and other powers.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what study there has been of the number and nature of the pharmaceutical industry's breaches of the requirements regarding advertising;

(2) if his Department and the Medicines Commission will together review the procedures governing the advertising of pharmaceutical drugs in the light of the successful prosecution of a drug company for an advertising offence in December 1986.

Mr. Newton: The Department carefully studies the published reports of the Association of British Pharmaceutical Industry (ABPI) code of practice committee. The Department prosecutes companies where the evidence warrants this. The prosecution referred to in the second question is the subject of appeal and it would therefore be inappropriate to comment upon it, or to review related issues, before the appeals are determined in court.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many complaints regarding advertising have been referred by his Department to the pharmaceutical industry's code of practice committee; and what percentage have been rejected by the committee.

Mr. Newton: In 1984-1986, three complaints were referred by the Department to the code of practice committee of the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry (ABPI).

The ABPI began communicating the findings of the committee to the Department of Health and Social Security, the British Medical Association, the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, the British Medical Journal, and the Pharmaceutical Journal in 1984. Since then it has investigated 117 allegations of breach of the code, of which 52 were upheld (including two of the cases referred by the Department).

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to provide a definition of the term legibility with regard to the statutory requirements relating to drug advertising.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so. The Medicines (Advertising to Medical and Dental Practitioners) Regulations 1978 already require that statements on side effects, precautions, contra-indications, dosage, and any warnings required by the licensing authority or its appropriate advisory body should be printed in a clear and legible manner and be placed in such a position that relationship to the claims for the product can readily be appreciated by the reader.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure that no drug advertisements are published before they have been approved by the pharmaceutical industry's code of practice committee.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so. I do not believe that compulsion of this kind is necessary, given the statutory requirements and the self-regulatory systems developed by the pharmaceutical industry to meet its own circumstances.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many prosecutions there have been for infringements of the provisions of the Medicines Act which relate to advertising; who was prosecuted; and when the prosecutions took place.

Mr. Newton: Since 1980, the latest date from which information is readily available, there have been four prosecutions for infringements of the provisions of the Medicines Act 1968 and regulations made thereunder which relate to advertising. These are detailed in the table.

Person/Company prosecuted	Date
Intimates Mail Regd.	25 September 1981
L. S. Troop	15 March 1982
Kent Private Clinic and Dr. B. Richards	17 January 1986
Roussel Laboratories Ltd. and Dr. C. S. Good[1]	19 December 1986

[1] Appeals against conviction are pending.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will refer to the Committee on Safety of Medicines the question as to whether drug companies should be allowed to claim, in their advertisements, safety aspects for a drug solely on the basis of animal studies.

Mr. Newton: Meaningful advice cannot be given in general terms, but only in relation to particular medicines after considering all available information about them. When granting, reviewing or varying licences for particular medicines the licensing authority considers all factors relevant to safety in use, and consults as necessary the appropriate advisory body.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will appoint a new advisory committee with responsibility for the advertising of medicines and with powers similar to those of the Committee on Safety of Medicines and the Committee on Review of Medicines.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so. The functions of the Committees on Safety of Medicines and on Review of Medicines are to give professional scientific advice on the intrinsic safety, quality and efficacy of medicines. This governs the content of licences for particular medicines which must be adhered to in any advertisements.

Babies (Bottle Feeding Equipment)

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he has any plans to introduce regulations to ensure that all advertisements for bottle feeding equipment carry a statement indicating the case for breastfeeding;

(2) if he has any plans to establish a manufacturing and marketing code with the manufacturers of baby-feeding teats and bottles and breast pumps.

Mrs. Currie: Officials are discussing a voluntary code of marketing and advertising practice with the manufacturers and distributors aimed at promoting and protecting breastfeeding. I understand the British Standards Institute is preparing a British standard for teats, and that one for feeding bottles is contemplated.

Vehicle Emissions (Health)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what research he is funding, or is intending to fund on the possible links between vehicle emissions and respiratory disease.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the possible health effects of vehicle emissions on cyclists.

Mrs. Currie: Observations that have been reported on the uptake of vehicle-derived pollutants, such as carbon monoxide and lead, do not show any higher values than among urban residents in general.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is funding any epidemiological studies to determine the effects of diesel emissions on human health.

Mrs. Currie: No. Findings are available from an earlier long-term study among London Transport employees, funded through the Medical Research Council, which is the main Government-funded agency for United Kingdom biomedical research receiving a grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science. There are, of course, few opportunities for defining groups with exposure specifically to diesel emissions.

AIDS

Mr. Cormack asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Staffordshire, South on 13 March, Official Report, column 325, how many meetings he and his Ministerial colleagues have had with religious leaders to discuss the subject of AIDS during the last six months.

Mr. Fowler: I have had several very useful meetings and other contacts with religious leaders on the subject of AIDS. I am most grateful for their understanding and co-operation, and I look forward to continuing this relationship.

Maternity Payments

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in London claimed maternity grant in (a) 1980, (b) 1981, (c) 1982, (d) 1983, (e) 1984, (f) 1985 and (g) 1986.

Mr. Major: It is estimated that the numbers of women who received the maternity grant in the Greater London council area in the years from 1980 to 1986 were as shown in the following table:

	Number
1980	81,500
1981	[1]
1982	82,800
1983	90,100
1984	107,950
1985	129,050
1986	[2]96,600

[1] Because of industrial action, no figures are held of the number of recipients in the year.
[2] To September 1986 only, the latest date for which figures are available.

Towers Hospital, Leicester

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on the escape by a patient from Arnold Lodge regional secure unit, Towers hospital, Leicester, on Thursday 26 February;

(2) if he is satisfied with security arrangements at Arnold Lodge regional secure unit, Towers hospital, Leicester;

(3) how many paitents are currently at Arnold Lodge secure unit, Towers hospital, Leicester; and what is the staff/patient ratio;

(4) how many patients have absconded from Arnold Lodge secure unit, Towers hospital Leicester, since the opening of the regional secure unit;

(5) in the event of an escape from a regional secure unit who exactly is notified; and, in the case of the specific escape from Arnold Lodge, Leicester, whether the police were informed.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 4 March 1987, c. 627-28]: The running of the Arnold Lodge secure unit is the responsibility of the Leicestershire district health authority. The unit currently has 30 beds available, of which normally 25 to 27 are in use. The minimum nurse/patient ratio is 2·3 nursing staff to every patient. I understand that, since the unit opened, there have been 17 cases in which patients have broken the terms of their authorised periods of time spent outside the unit either within or outside the main hospital precincts with or without an escort ("parole") which is allowed as part of the rehabilitation process. There has also been one escape. Parole is granted only after very careful consideration by the clinical team and on the basis that it is safe and that there is no forseeable danger of the patient breaking the parole agreement. Individual parole arrangements are reviewed each week. Very many parole decisions have been made since Arnold Lodge and its predecessor the interim secure unit at Grange Lodge were established.

Notification of an escape from the unit or of a breach in parole is a matter for local decision based on the individual circumstances of the case. In the latest incident on 26 February the patient escaped through a bathroom window and was detained by police about five hours later. Neither this nor any of the other recent incidents is regarded by the health authority at this stage as the result of a specific failure by staff. However, the health authority has reviewed parole procedures, tightened physical security and, following a report to the health authority in March, has established a committee of inquiry to inquire into the circumstances of the recent incidents and to make any necessary recommendations about the unit. Ministers have asked to be kept informed of the outcome of that inquiry. My hon. Friend may wish to approach the chairman of the Leicestershire health authority to obtain any further information he requires.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Alexander asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will designate the village of Laxton in Nottinghamshire an environmentally sensitive area under the Agriculture Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The further areas which we shall designate next year will be selected from the shortlist which the Countryside Commission and the Nature Conservancy Council submitted to me last year. We recognise that there are a number of areas of environmental value, including Laxton, which are not on that list but we are anxious to give priority to those areas which the Government's environmental advisers have jointly identified as candidates for early designation.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the additional funds to be provided for environmentally sensitive areas in 1988 will be used to designate further areas throughout the United Kingdom; and if it is his intention to designate new areas.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Yes. With colleagues in the other Agriculture Departments we intend to provide additional funds for environmentally sensitive areas in 1988. My right hon. Friend the Minister will shortly be considering further areas for designation in England.

Rabbits

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Ministry is carrying out to establish the effectiveness and humaneness of live catch cage traps for controlling rabbits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Scientists in my Department have designed and developed a baited cage trapping system to catch rabbits live at the site of damage. The system is currently undergoing intensive trials to determine whether it is a cost-effective and humane method of controlling rabbits.

Food Aid

Mrs. Shields asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of food available for distribution under the European Economic Community food aid scheme has now been delivered.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Food (Radioactive Contamination)

Mr. Baldry asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what restrictions are at present imposed, or have recently been imposed, on the movement, sale and consumption of animal and vegetable products, live or dead, as a direct or indirect result of radioactive contamination anywhere in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

EC (Wheat Sales)

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about recent sales of wheat by the European Economic Community to the Soviet Union and the effect of such sales upon the feed price to the poultry industry.

Mr. Gummer: So far in the current marketing year export certificates for 11·85 million tonnes of wheat have been issued by the European Community; there are no special arrangements for exports to the Soviet Union and it is not possible to say what proportion of these exports are destined for that country. The price of feedwheat in the United Kingdom is below the intervention price and the poultry industry is likely to be paying a little more for its supplies than at this time last year and appreciably less than it was paying in March 1983 and March 1984.

Salcombe Estuary

Mr. Steen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a grant towards the cost of dredging the low-water channel in the Salcombe estuary for commercial shellfish vessels working the shellfish quays;

(2) when he issued a consent for the dumping of the dredged soil from the low-water channel in the Salcombe estuary; and if there were any conditions attached to this consent;

(3) if he will make funds available to the Salcombe harbour board to fund the costs of the proposed monitoring by the Nature Conservancy Council of the disposal of the dredged soil from the low-water channel in the licensed dumping ground.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 23 March 1987]: I shall send to my hon. Friend a copy of the licence issued on 5 March under part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 for the disposal of dredged spoil from Salcombe estuary.

My Department informed the harbour authority at Salcombe on 20 February that a grant of approximately 50 per cent. would be payable towards the eligible expenditure on dredging the access channels. This does not include the cost of the monitoring that the Nature Conservancy Council wishes to undertake in respect of these operations.

Outgoers Scheme

Mr. Walters asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will consider increasing the level of compensation under the outgoers scheme for dairy farmers.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 23 March 1987]: I have no plans to do so.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Houses (Southwark)

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses were completed in the London borough of Southwark in each successive year from 1979 to 1986, inclusive.

Mr. Tracey: Reported completions of dwellings for the borough council and for the Greater London council in Southwark appear in the following issues of "Local Housing Statistics" which are available in the Library:

Year	Issue Number	Table Number
1979	53	5, 7
1986 1st half	80	1

The returns from Southwark were incomplete when the 1985 figures were published: 38 completions for the borough have now been reported.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the sites of special scientific interest in England that have been, or are due to be, damaged or destroyed through developments which have been given planning permission since 1977, the type of development, the county and district or borough in which they are situated, and the date when permission was given.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Nature Conservancy Council is compiling the information requested in respect of Great Britain. I shall write to the hon. Member with the details, including those for the areas for which my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland are responsible, as soon as the information is available.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the next rate support grant report.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 20 March at column 650.

Rates

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the proposed minimum proportion of rates or community charge to be paid by persons on low incomes.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on this issue.

Anti-fouling Paint

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if the two sites for testing anti-fouling paint on the Yealm and in the Salcombe estuary have been licensed by Her Majesty's Government; and whether the companies are required to report the chemicals which they are using;

(2) if, in the light of the effect on fisheries of anti-fouling paints, he will take steps to require future trials of paint to take place away from coastal sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The two sites for testing anti-fouling paints on the Yealm and in the Salcombe estuary are not currently licensed by Her Majesty's Government. The companies concerned are not currently required to report the chemicals being tested. However, from 1 July such facilities and the activities carried out at them will be subject to the provisions of part III of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985. The detailed arrangements for regulating such sites, including their location and operation, are still under consideration but it is intended that all the relevant factors will be taken into account.

National Parks Committees

Mrs. Shields asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he conducts when deciding who to appoint and reappoint to the national parks committees.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Countryside Commission is my right hon. Friend's statutory advisers in this matter, but it is also his custom to seek the views of the national park chairmen. In addition, he considers nominations from a wide variety of sources including hon. Members with national park constituencies.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list each publication produced by his Department for public distribution since 1979 together with the date of publication, the print-run, the total cost, the number distributed, the method of distribution, the subject covered and the target group.

Mr. Ridley: There is a comprehensive list published annually of all Department of the Environment and Department of Transport publications in the Library, including those published by HMSO. The rest of the information requested is not held centrally and could not be provided without incurring disproportinate expense.

Departmental Costs

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, if he will give (a) the total cost of running his Department and (b) the total number of civil servants employed in each year since 1979.

Mr. Ridley: The information requested is as follows:

	DOE(c) administrative expenditure (£,000)		Number of civil servants employed
	Cost	Real terms[1]	at 1 April
1979-80	87,078	140,853	1979	11,217
1980-81	116,060	158,256	1980	10,530
1981-82	114,679	142,381	1981	9,821
1982-83	112,395	130,114	1982	8,771
1983-84	145,409	161,148	1983	7,813
1984-85	130,294	138,416	1984	6,605
1985-86	139,563	139,563	1985	6,561
1986-87	140,750	136,650	1986	6,521

[1] These figures are expressed at 1985-86 prices, in line with the latest Public Expenditure White Paper (Command 56).

The expenditure figures include all capital and current administrative expenditures. For 1986-87 a Treasury definition of running costs has been established which excludes capital and certain minor current expenditures on this basis the figure for 1986-87 would be £133,582,000. (£129,691 in real terms).

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which soccer matches he has attended since his appointment.

Southwark

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the amount in 1985 prices for each year since 1985 that the London borough of Southwark has been allowed to spend under the rate-capping legislation, disregarding any additional allowance given for the transfer of Greater London council services.

Mr. Chope: The expenditure levels which my right hon. Friend has determined under the Rates Act 1984 for Southwark, expressed in 1985-86 prices are:

1985-86	108·437
1986-87 without allowance for former GLC service	105·279
1986-87 with allowance for former GLC services	130·281
1987-88	124·671

Figures expressed at 1985-86 prices using the GDP deflator. In 1987-88 no split was made between former borough and former GLC services.

Pension Investment Research Centre

Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the implications for their fiduciary duty towards local authority pensioners under the local government superannuation fund regulations of the use made of, and financial support given to, the Pension Investment Research Centre by certain local authorities in London.

Mr. Chope: The Local Government Superannuation Regulations 1986 set out a number of rules governing the investment of these superannuation funds. They impose limits on the proportion of a fund which may be invested in certain ways, and require fund authorities to obtain expert financial advice at reasonable intervals. The accounts of the funds are subject to audit under part III of the Local Government Finance Act 1982, and the auditor may apply to the court for a declaration that an item of expenditure is contrary to law. Alternatively, it would be open to a person with sufficient interest to apply for judicial review under Order 53 of the Rules of the Supreme Court. My right hon. Friend considers that these safeguards are adequate, but will keep the position under review.

Direct Labour Organisations

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will take any action against loss-making direct labour organisations including the one operated by the London borough of Camden.

Mr. Chope: As a result of Camden's losses of over £300,000 over the financial years 1984-85 and 1985-86, my right hon. Friend has asked the council to submit a special report on its DLO's major new construction activities. My right hon. Friend has also asked Hull city council to submit a special report, following its DLO's losses of over £1·6 million on major new construction in 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Both these requests follow the decision, to which I referred in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Streatham (Mr. Shelton) on 18 February 1987, to request special reports from authorities after two consecutive failures to achieve the prescribed rate of return on capital.

Landscape Conservation Orders

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list the organisations that have responded to his Department's document entitled "Protecting the Countryside: the Government's Consultation Proposals for Landscape Conservation Orders", and if he will make a statement about the responses received.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 23 March 1987]: Consultees were invited to submit comments by 6 March. The following organisations have responded:

In addition, comments have been received from seven individuals. My colleagues in the Welsh and Scottish Offices have received 12 responses. With the agreement of the respondents, I have arranged for copies of some responses to be made available for inspection in the Library of the House today. I shall give very careful consideration to all of the points raised in the responses, before announcing how the Government intend to proceed.

Salcombe Estuary

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has as to the degree of consultation with the local harbour board undertaken by the Nature Conservancy Council prior to the designation of the entire Salcombe estuary as a site of special scientific interest;

(2) what representations he has received on the designation of the entire Salcombe estuary as a site of special scientific interest in the light of the proposed dredging of the low water and other channels for fishing vessels.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, Monday 23 March 1987]: I am advised by the Nature Conservancy Council that the harbour authorities were consulted before the Salcombe estuary was notified as a site of special scientific interest in February 1987. Owners and occupiers of land who have been notified may make representations or objections to the Nature Conservancy Council within four months of the date of notification. The Nature Conservancy Council has not to date received any representations relating to the proposed dredging operations.

Council of Environment Ministers

Mr. Harris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Council of the Environment Ministers meeting on 19 and 20 March.

Mr. Waldegrave: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting.

The Council reached agreement in principle on a resolution concerning the fourth environment action programme. The resolution recalls the principles and objectives of the Community's environment policy as set out in the Single European Act, emphasises the importance of the effective implementation of environmental legislation, and urges the integration of environmental considerations into other areas of Community policy. The resolution will not be formally adopted until parliamentary consideration has been completed.

The Council reached agreement on the Community's approach to negotiating a protocol to control chloroflurocarbons (CFCs) in the context of the Vienna convention for the protection of the ozone layer. This was in the form of guidelines for the Commission to follow, on behalf of the Community, during negotiations. The guidelines envisage a three part protocol: a freeze on CFC production at current levels; to be followed by a specified percentage reduction of production; with a third and essential element of regular scientific, technical and economic reviews.

Useful progress was made on vehicle emissions. A majority of member states reaffirmed their commitment to the proposals known as the Luxembourg package. Although it was not possible to achieve agreement on standards for particulate emissions from diesel engined cars, a compromise solution on gaseous emissions from heavy vehicles, based on proposals developed during the United Kingdom presidency, received support from most member states. The Council also reached a measure of agreement on a proposal for member states to be allowed to prohibit the sale of leaded regular petrol.

The Council reached agreed conclusions on the general approach to the draft directive on large combustion plants. further progress was made on the question of emission standards for new plants. In addition, although some member states maintained their general reserves on the draft directive, all delegations undertook to contribute to an agreement at the May Council.

The Council agreed the directive amending directive 75/716/EEC on the approximation of the laws of the member states relating to the sulphur content of certain liquid fuels (gas oil). The directive on the control of pollution by asbestos and an amendment to the major accident hazards directive were formally adopted.

The Council conducted a preliminary examination of the proposal for a Council regulation concerning the export from and import into the Community of certain dangerous chemicals, and instructed the Committee of Permanent Representatives to seek agreement on the basis of the principles already adopted by the OECD and incorporated into the draft UNEP guidelines. The Council welcomed the actions of those member states which wished to go beyond these principles and to experiment with other systems, including forms of "Prior Informed Consent" by the importing country, so that the practical value of such approaches could be tested.

Finally, Environment Ministers formally launched European Year of the Environment in Brussels with the unveiling of a sculpture on the theme of technology and the environment.

London Scientific Services

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to follow up assurances made by Her Majesty's Government during the passage of the Local Government Act 1985 in respect of the London scientific services staffing levels.

Mr. Chope: The assurances given by Her Majesty's Government during the passage of the Local Government Bill 1985 related to safeguarding the scientific and technical services during the transitional period. Such assurances were incorporated into the provisions of schedule 13, paragraph 8 to the Act. I understand that the London Residuary Body is consulting the clients of the London scientific services and will decide what future level of staffing is appropriate in the light of their needs.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the number of staff employed within London scientific services on 31 March 1986 and at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Chope: The number of staff employed within the London scientific services on 31 March 1986 and 2 March 1987 were 162 and 145 respectively.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Sir G. Finsberg) of 19 March, Official Report, columns 558-60, if he will provide an analysis by (a) type of assets, (b) disposal price and (c) property location of the estimated £141·4 million of capital receipts to be distributed by the London residuary body.

Mr. Chope: The estimated capital receipts cash entitlement of £141·4 million to be distributed by 31 March 1988 amongst rating authorities in London is based on estimates and forecasts made by the LRB. The Department does not have a detailed analysis of this amount.

The gross amounts of capital receipts receivable from major sources in 1986-87 and 1987-88 are as follows, together with the net amounts estimated to be distributable after deductions made by LRB for various purposes.

	1986-87			1987-88
	Housing	Non-housing	Total	Housing	Non-housing	Total
Gross Receipts
Disposal of land and property	4·5	27·0	31·5	15·0	85·0	100·0
Repayment of principal	30·5	2·5	33·0	30·0	3·0	33·3
Sales of council houses	31·9	nil	31·9	33·5	nil	33·5
	66·9	29·5	96·4	78·8	88·0	166·8
Net Receipts
Distributable	28·3	3·4	31·7	48·0	61·7	109·7

Further details of these receipts will be published in the RB's accounts for 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Sir G. Finsberg) of 19 March, Official Report, columns 558-60, how much of the estimated £141·4 million of capital receipts is currently held by the London residuary body.

Mr. Chope: The £141·4 million estimate contained in that answer represents the estimated £263·3 million total of capital receipts to be received by the LRB up to 31 March 1988, less amounts to be deducted by LRB for various purposes. The Department does not keep running estimates of total LRB capital receipts.

The Local Government Reorganisation (Capital Money) (Greater London) Order 1987 (S.I. No. 118) required that any capital money available in any financial year should be distributed, so far as possible, by 31 March, with final adjustments being made before the following 30 June. The LRB has notified rating authorities in London that it expects to distribute £31·7 million capital receipts cash entitlements by 31 March 1987.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The value of work placed to contract in the current financial year of up to the end of January is around £7·4 billion and is expected to be of the order of £9 billion in the full year.

41. Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have been made in defence procurement procedures designed to avoid cost overruns since his Department last gave evidence to the Committee of Public Accounts.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since December 1986, when the chief of defence procurement last gave evidence to the Committee of Public Accounts, the Ministry of Defence has continued to implement and monitor the significant changes in working practices then described to the Committee and which were later strongly welcomed and endorsed in the sixth report from the Committee, published on 11 March 1987.

46. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will slow down the deployment of cruise missiles in the United Kingdom during discussions on the control of intermediate nuclear weapons between the Soviet Union and the United States of America.

Mine Warfare Forces

24. Mr. Duffy asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with the present numbers and readiness of the Royal Navy's mine warfare forces; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: Since May 1979 the Government have carried out a comprehensive modernisation of the Royal Navy's mine countermeasures forces. We have ordered eight more Hunt Class dual-role minehunters-sweepers,

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The second Trident submarine, SSBN 06, will be ordered later this year and the others for SSBNs 07 and 08 will be placed progressively thereafter.

29. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many cases of unauthorised disclosure of information under the Official Secrets Act involving his Department occurred in each of the last five years; how many such cases were dealt with as internal disciplinary matters; and in how many cases police inquiries were initiated.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Statistics are not kept centrally on the numbers of alleged unauthorised disclosures of defence information. Investigations of such cases very occasionally show that such disclosures were deliberate; more frequently they are inconclusive, or they show that there was no breach of security or that any breach was due to carelessness. Any prosecutions under the Official Secrets Acts must be authorised by my right hon. Friend the Attorney-General; where preliminary investigation suggests that a prosecution under those Acts might have to be considered, the Director of Public Prosecutions is consulted over the method of investigation. In 1982 one member of my Department's staff was prosecuted for such offences; in 1983 two; in 1984 none; in 1985 eight and in 1986 none. Two of those persons were convicted and nine acquitted.

It is not known how many other educational establishments will have received the film through other channels, such as organisations interested in defence matters.

42. Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received calling for the withdrawal from circulation of the Ministry of Defence film "Keeping the Peace"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: As at 20 March 1987, the Department has received representations from 14 members of the public against the showing of the film "Keeping the Peace" in schools. By the same date requests for copies of the film had been received from 461 secondary schools, 65 colleges, 11 teachers centres, five polytechnics, and six universities. All such requests are being met.

Republic of Ireland

37. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's forces' relations with the forces of the Irish Republic.

Mr. Stanley: Relations between Her Majesty's armed forces and the forces of the Irish Republic are good. It is our wish to maintain and, whenever possible, improve these good relations to the mutual benefit of both forces.

Members of the Irish defence forces have attended training courses in the United Kingdom, and we hope they will continue to do so.

Subcontractors (Payments)

39. Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to require prime contractors to pay subcontractors promptly.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Our policy is to encourage prime contractors to follow the Ministry's example and pay subcontractors promptly when their work has been satisfactorily completed. We cannot require them to do so.

Saudi Arabian Tornado Order

40. Sir Edward Gardner asked the Secretary of State for Defence following his visit to the British Aerospace factories at Warton and Preston, if he will make a statement on the progress of the Saudi Arabian Tornado order.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Progress on the Saudi Arabian order for Tornado and other aircraft is good. Last spring six Tornado IDS were delivered to the Royal Saudi air force, together with weapons, supporting equipment and spares, and this year more Tornados and the first two PC9 trainers have been delivered. The training programme for RSAF ground and air crew continues in Saudi Arabia and at RAF stations in the United Kingdom.

44. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the meeting between the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces, and representatives of the Officers' Pensions Society; and what action has been taken by his Department as a result of that meeting.

Mr. Freeman: The meeting was arranged at the request of the chairman of the Officers' Pensions Society, Admiral Sir Peter White, GBE. It provided an opportunity for the society to discuss with me a number of issues associated with pensions awarded under the Armed Forces Pension Scheme which are of particular concern to members of the society. These discussions were helpful to mutual understanding of the problems and I am continuing to give consideration to points raised.

Royal Ordnance Factories

49. Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the sale of the Royal Ordnance factories.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for South Ribble (Mr. Atkins) on 16 March 1987, at column 376.

Military Police

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Defence what guidelines currently exist concerning the conduct of the military police; and what changes are being considered.

Mr. Freeman: The conduct of members of the Royal Military Police is governed by legislation and by comprehensive and detailed guidelines laid down in the following publications:

a. The Army Act 1955
b. The Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984
c. The Manual of Military Law 1972
d. Queens Regulations for the Army 1975

f. Provost Marshal(Army) Administrative Instructions
g. Command Standing Operating Procedures
h. Unit Standing Orders

There are no specific changes currently under consideration, but changes are made from time to time as a consequence of the introduction of new legislation and as a result of Provost Marshal's (Army) continuous internal management audit procedures and theatre-formation commanders' orders and instructions.

Short Take-off and Vertical Landing Project

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress on the advanced short take-off and vertical landing project.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom and United States Governments are engaged in a bilateral programme of studies into propulsion and control technologies for a possible advanced short take-off and landing (ASTOVL) aircraft. The programme, which is expected to last for some five years, involves research establishments and industry in both countries. The main objective of this programme of work is to develp the necessary technologies up to a point where a decision on a joint flight demonstrator programme could be taken with confidence. Satisfactory progress is being maintained.

Horseshoe Barracks, Shoeburyness

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his future plans for the Horseshoe barracks in Shoeburyness.

Mr. Freeman: I regret that the studies for the possible future use of Horseshoe barracks in Shoeburyness are taking longer than expected, and at this stage I cannot confirm when a decision will be made. I shall write to my hon. Friend when the outcome is known.

Royal Marines

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about morale in, and current levels of recruitment to, the Royal Marines.

Mr. Freeman: Morale in the Royal Marines remains high. The levels of recruitment for the last two years have been:

	Officers	Other Ranks
1985-86	63	913
1986-87	63	976

The ratio of applicants to places (officers and other ranks) is about 3:1.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list each publication produced by his Department for public distribution since 1979, together with the date of publication, the print-run, the total cost, the number distributed, the method of distribution, the subject covered and the target-group.

Mr. Stanley: This information cannot be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total budget allocated for the production of the leaflet "20 Questions on Defence"; if he will provide a breakdown of the budget; how many leaflets will be printed; how they will be distributed; and towards whom they are directed.

Mr. Stanley: The total budget for the design, artwork and printing of 11,000 copies of the leaflet was £2,700, shared equally between the Ministry of Defence and Foreign and Commonwealth Office. A further 5,000 copies have been ordered at a total cost of £560, shared equally between the two Departments. The leaflet is intended to help to explain aspects of British defence and arms control policies to Members of both Houses, British Members of the European Parliament, members of the general public, and interested groups in other countries. Copies have been sent to all MPs and British MEPs, a number of peers, regular recipients of Foreign and Commonwealth Office publications on defence and disarmament issues, and British embassies and high commissions. It is intended to issue the remainder in response to specific requests or expressions of interest in the subjects covered in the leaflets.

ENERGY

British Coal

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Coal to discuss the markets for coal.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have regular meetings with the chairman of the British Coal Corporation to discuss all aspects of the coal industry, including the markets for coal.

NATO (Petroleum Planning Committee)

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make the minutes of the meetings of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation petroleum planning committee available in the Library.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: No.

North-West

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to discuss the north-west's future energy requirements with business and local authority leaders.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Government's approach to energy takes full account of the requirements of the regions. Ministers often meet business and local authority leaders in the north-west to discuss energy issues of mutual concern.

Cash Limits

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any changes to announce to his Department's cash limits for 1986-87.

Mr. Peter Walker: The new cash limit for class VI, vote 2 is £266·102 million. The change arises partly from the transfer of £1·0 million to the Department of the Environment as a special contribution towards additional costs in this financial year of the homes insulation scheme.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid Programme

Mr. Lester asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will give the outturn figures for the gross aid programme of each of the years 1978-79 to 1985-86, together with the estimated figure for 1986-87; and what proportion of gross national product these figures represent;

(2) if he will give the percentage of the gross aid programme in each of the years 1978-79 to 1985-86, together with estimates for 1986-87, spent on (a) multilateral aid, (b) bilateral country programmes including budgetary aid and aid and trade provision and (c) other bilateral aid.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

	Gross aid programme	Percentage of GNP at market prices	Multilateral	Country programmes	Other
	(£ million)		(percentage)	(percentage)	(percentage)
1978-79	764	0·44	27	61	12
1979-80	834	0·40	29	57	14
1980-81	968	0·41	29	58	13
1981-82	1,016	0·39	38	49	13

1985-86	1,193	0·33	42	43	15
1986-87	1,266	0·33	41	45	14

Figures for 1986-87 are estimates based on provision in the Spring Supplementary Estimates for the Overseas Aid Vote; the GNP for 1986-87 has been estimated from information in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1987-88".

Mr. Lester asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the amounts of aid disbursed as (a) project aid, (b) programme aid, (c) technical co-operation, (d) budgetary aid and (e) aid and trade provision for each of the years 1978-79 to 1985-86, together with estimates for 1986-87.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

(£ million)

	Project aid	Programme aid	Technical co-operation	Budgetary aid	Aid and trade provision
1978-79	195	153	171	15	12
1979-80	186	120	212	9	29
1980-81	325	67	220	9	26
1981-82	239	71	218	9	53

1985-86	248	53	302	9	36
1986-87	215	79	304	8	90

Figures for 1986-87 are provisional estimates.

Mr. Lester asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of technical co-operation aid in the years 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87 estimated was devoted to (a) the provision of experts, wholly or partly financed, (b) training and (c) other forms of assistance.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

	1984-85 per cent.	1985-86 per cent.
Experts	32	31
Training	21	20
Other	47	49

"Experts" includes consultancies and "training" includes Commonwealth scholarships and fellowships.

Planning allocations are not based on categories of technical co-operation, so an analysis for 1986-87 will be available only after the accounts have been completed.

DEFENCE

Soviet Defence Minister

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to meet the Soviet Defence Minister to discuss European security; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

RAF Molesworth

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many United States Air Force personnel are currently stationed at Molesworth.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 6 March, at column 734.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence if Her Majesty's Government will make it their policy to make a statement to the House before Molesworth becomes operational.

Mr. Stanley: Further information will be given about RAF Molesworth as appropriate and subject to the constraints of security.

United States Forces

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to the answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 291, to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East, if he will list any further military construction projects at installations in the United Kingdom used by United States forces on which construction work is due to start in the United States fiscal year 1988, dependent on approval by the United States Congress.

Mr. Stanley: I understand from the United States authorities that since my reply to the hon. Member on 11 February the only additions to the list of military construction projects at installations used by the United States forces in the United Kingdom that are due to be started in FY 1988 are a youth centre and automotive hobby shop at RAF Greenham Common.

THE ARTS

National Gallery

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Minister for the Arts what progress is being made on the planned extension to the National Gallery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The trustees of the National Gallery announced in April 1985 that, thanks to the generosity of the Sainsbury family, a new extension would be built on the Hampton site to the west of the main gallery building. Last year the trustees chose Mr. Robert Venturi to design the new extension. I understand that his designs will be put on public display at the National Gallery from Wednesday 15 April.

We have been in discussion with the trustees and donors about the future use and maintenance of the new extension. I have placed in the Library copies of my letter of 16 March to Sir John Sainsbury which records our joint understanding on this.

The new extension is a very significant development for our national museums and galleries and demonstrates what can be achieved in partnership between enlightened benefactors and a national institution. The Government are deeply indebted to the Sainsbury brothers for their magnificent generosity and commitment to the arts. I am particularly delighted therefore that the new extension is to bear their family name.

TRANSPORT

Unleaded Petrol (M1)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that service stations on the M1 between London and Wakefield should be contractually obliged to serve unleaded petrol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: The terms of the current leases for motorway service areas do not entitle us to impose a requirement of this kind.

Unleaded petrol is already on sale at three service areas — Rothersthorpe on M1, Killington Lake on M6 and South Mimms on M25. We intend to remind operators at other areas (and through them, the firms providing fuel) of the tax differential announced in the budget. We will encourage them to make early provision of lead-free petrol.

North Sea Operations (Helicopter Cover)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what emergency helicopter cover is available for offshore production platforms, semi-submersible rigs and safety vessels in the event of accident.

Mr. Michael Spicer: There are presently 12 helicopter bases around the United Kingdom declared for search and rescue which are available for accidents involving offshore oil platforms and support craft. There are nine at RAF bases at Lossiemouth, Leuchars, Boulmer, Leconfield, Coltishall, Manston, Chivenor, Brawdy and Valley; two at RN bases at Lee-on-Solent and Culdrose and one civil helicopter at Sumburgh, Shetland Isles, on contract to the Department of Transport. One further civil contract helicopter is soon to be provided for north west Scotland. Three SAR helicopter flights are also maintained by oil companies on the North sea fields as part of their commitment to the safety of their installations, personnel and support craft.

In addition, there are RN anti-submarine Sea King helicopters at Culdross and Prestwick, United States air force long-range helicopters at Woodbridge, Suffolk and other aircraft which may be made available for SAR operations. Support can also be expected from foreign SAR helicopter resources in Norway, Denmark, France, Belgium and the Irish Republic.

A1-M1 Link Road

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to be able to announce a decision on the A1-M1 link road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport expect to announce their joint decision before the Easter recess.

Roll-on/Roll-off Ferries (Safety)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport what detailed response he has given to the National Union of Seamen in answer to its 10 proposals for improving the safety of roll-on/roll-off ferries in the light of the Zeebrugge disaster.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend is carefully considering the various points raised by the National Union of Seamen. He will be answering its letter shortly.

Airships (Noise)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps have been taken to reduce the level of noise from airships overflying London.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Following representations that were made to me last year by my hon. Friend and others, my Department held urgent discussions with Airship Industries, which, I know, is anxious to ensure that the operation of its airships is acceptable environmentally. During the winter modifications have been introduced which makes the airship quieter. Further improvement is possible but it will take time. It has, therefore, agreed, as an interim measure, to introduce a number of operational noise reduction procedures while the research and development is proceeding. These procedures will result in very significant reductions in ground noise levels. I understand that the Goodyear airship will not be returning this year.

Central Reservation Safety Fences

Sir George Young asked the Secretary of State for Transport what efforts have been made to ensure that the design and performance of central reserve safety fences are satisfactory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Current designs of safety fences were established from extensive research, including full-scale impact testing. Designs are required to contain a 1·5 tonne vehicle travelling at 70 mph and striking the fence at an angle of 20 deg and to redirect it safely, ideally keeping the forces experienced by vehicle occupants as low as possible. Such designs cope most effectively with impacts from cars, the most likely vehicles to collide with safety fences.

The Department has a continuing programme of research that may lead to new designs in the future that can cope with a wider range of vehicles at justifiable cost. Recent results from one element of our research programme demonstrated the effectiveness of safety fences in reducing the severity of accidents, and showed that more central reserve safety fences would be justified on dual carriageway roads.

Consequently, changes to the Department's standard for safety fences were announced on 17 December 1986 that will substantially increase the level of their provision on dual carriageway trunk roads. They will now be provided on all new roads and gradually on the vast majority of existing roads. We estimate that this will lead to a saving of over 1,000 casualties per annum. I am also writing to my hon. Friend.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Capital Allocations

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Yeovil on 6 March, Official Report, column 706, concerning a formula used in determining capital allocations, if he will publish a table showing, for each recent year, the amount and proportion of capital allocations determined by that formula; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: No. It is not the Department's practice to publish the elements which comprise its block allocations to local education authorities in respect of prescribed capital expenditure.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the pupil-teacher ratios for primary and secondary schools in England and Wales.

Mr. Dunn: The pupil-teacher ratios in maintained primary and secondary schools in England in January 1986 were 22·1 to 1 and 15·9 to 1 respectively. The corresponding figures for Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Substandard Primary School Places

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will publish a table showing, for each non-metropolitan county education authority that replied to both of his Department's circular letters dated 5 February 1982 and 30 June 1986 with information of substandard primary school places (a) the proportion of such places in 1982, expressed as a percentage of the number of primary schoolchildren in maintained and voluntary schools at that time, (b) the proportion of such places in 1986, expressed as a percentage of the number of primary schoolchildren in maintained and voluntary schools at that time and (c) the figure by which the change between (a) and (b) differs from the percentage change between the total figures for all such authorities providing this information; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish a table showing, for each metropolitan district education authority outside Greater London that replied to both of his Department's circular letters dated 5 February 1982 and 30 June 1986 with information of substandard primary school places (a) the proportion of such places in 1982, expressed as a percentage of the number of primary schoolchildren in maintained and voluntary schools at that time, (b) the proportion of such places in 1986, expressed as a percentage of the number of primary schoolchildren in maintained and voluntary schools at that time and (c) the figure by which the change between (a) and (b) differs from the percentage change between the total figures for all such authorities providing this information; and if he will make a statement.

(3) if he will publish a table showing, for each local education authority in Greater London that replied to both of his Department's circular letters dated 5 February 1982 and 30 June 1986 with information of substandard primary school places (a) the proportion of such places in 1982, expressed as a percentage of the number of primary schoolchildren in maintained and voluntary schools at that time, (b) the proportion of such places in 1986, expressed as a percentage of the number of primary schoolchildren in maintained and voluntary schools at that time and (c) the figure by which the change between (a) and (b) differs from the percentage change between the total figures for all such authorities providing this information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Further Education (Statistics)

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of school leavers with five or more higher grade O-level-CSE passes in each local education authority stayed on in full-time education after the minimum school-leaving age.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Information is not available in the form requested. The proportions of maintained school leavers in England with five or more higher grades at O-level-CSE who had either stayed on at school or who had left at the minimum school leaving age, intending to continue full-time education elsewhere, are as follows. The percentages do not include those pupils who left school without five or more higher grade O-level-CSE passes and subsequently achieved this level of qualification, but do include those who achieved this level of qualification at least in part in the sixth form.

Leavers from maintained schools in England with five or more higher grade[1] results at O-level or CSE.

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the age participation rate or index for 16 to 19-year-olds in full-time education; and what information he has about comparable rates for each member state of the European Community, the United States of America and Japan.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The available information for selected countries is shown in the following table for 16 to 18-year-olds. Rates for part-time students, including the youth training scheme, are also shown where they are available as they form an important element of United Kingdom further education.

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will publish a list showing the percentage of pupils in each local education authority who (a) stay on to the sixth form and (b) continue full-time education at further education college.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The table shows the percentage of the population aged 16 in full-time education in each local education authority in England in 1985-86. It shows separately those in maintained schools and those in further education establishments.

Some 16 per cent. of 16-year-olds also study in FE colleges part-time during the day. Figures for part-time study for individual authorities were published by the Department in "Statistical Bulletin 9/86".

Research Councils

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether, in view of last month's university pay award, he will now increase the funds available to the research councils so that they can maintain their existing level of project support.

Mr. Walden: The university pay award is a generous one which will benefit the research councils by helping to encourage our best university scientists to continue to work in this country rather than go abroad. It is for the research councils to decide how best to manage their priorities. We are discussing with them the implications of absorbing the cost of the pay increase. The additional cost to the research councils in 1987-88 of the academic pay settlement is estimated to be £15 million out of a total science budget of around £660 million.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Stephen Bogle (Death)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what inquiries he has conducted into the death of Stephen Bogle at Thames magistrates' court on 12 August 1986; and what action he intends to take;

(2) whether there will be an inquiry into the death of Stephen Bogle at Thames magistrates' court on 12 August 1986 by (a) the police or (b) the prison medical service.

Mr. Mellor: A review of Mr. Bogle's treatment in prison custody prior to his death has been carried out. This has shown that he received appropriate medical treatment during that time. The question whether there was any misconduct by police officers is under investigation by the Metropolitan police following the receipt of a complaint about this case. The investigation is being supervised by the Police Complaints Authority.

Extradition

Mr. George asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications have been made by foreign Governments to the United Kingdom to extradite their nationals for each of the last five years; how many of these have been granted; and if he will provide a breakdown by country.

Mr. Mellor: Information on the nationality of fugitives is not readily available. The table therefore gives the numbers of applications from foreign countries (that is other than Commonwealth countries and the Republic of Ireland) by year of request in respect of all nationalities for the years 1982 to 1986. Requests to trace fugitives and requests for provisional arrest which were not followed by formal requisitions have not been included.

Mr. George asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications have been made for the extradition of British citizens abroad, for each of the last five years; how many were granted; and if he will break down the figures on a country basis.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information is given in the following table and does not distinguish between extradition requests made for British and those made for non-British citizens. The table (which covers requests made to both foreign and Commonwealth Governments but not the Republic of Ireland) gives the total number of requests made in the period 1982 to 1986. Requests granted in a year later than that in which the requests were made are given by year of request. Some of the requests are still pending. Requests granted include cases where the fugitive returned voluntarily.

Electoral Register (Lone Women)

Mr. Michael Cocks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in order to provide protection for women living on their own, he will amend the Representation of the People Regulations 1986 so that initials instead of forenames are entered on the electoral register.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Such a change would require fresh primary legislation and we are not persuaded that it should be made. The use of forenames is necessary to reduce the risk of personation and to assist staff at polling stations in identifying voters.

Mr. W. John Fleming (Extradition)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to secure the extradition from the United States of America of Mr. W. John Fleming; if he will estimate the cost to public funds of the efforts made so far; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No request has been made to the United States for the extradition of Mr. Fleming.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many places have been allocated under the community programme for crime prevention.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As at 28 February 1987 there were 8,294 places allocated under the community programme for crime prevention on a total of 279 projects providing a range of services such as household security, youth activities, and crime prevention education and publicity.

United States Citizens (Prison Sentences)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there are any arrangements for citizens of the United States, whether adult or juvenile, convicted of criminal offences in the United Kingdom to serve any custodial sentence imposed in the United States of America.

Mr. Mellor: Yes. Provision is made for such arrangements in the Council of Europe convention on the transfer of sentenced persons, to which both the United Kingdom and the United States of America are parties.

Mr. V. Dajibhai and Mr. A. Sharif

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will cause to be published the reports of the Avon and Somerset constabulary into the death in August 1986 of Vimal Dajibhai and the death in October 1986 of Ashad Sharif.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The publication of the police report following an investigation is a matter for the chief officer. It is not the normal practice to publish material other than that submitted in evidence; to do so would discourage members of the public from co-operating fully with the police.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make the gathering of information on ethnic origins compulsory, and publish the percentage of entrants to his Department who failed to respond to the ethnic origins questionnaire.

Mr. Hurd: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 24 March by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to her question on the compulsory provision of information about ethnic origin.

As I stated in my reply to the hon. Member on 9 March, of the 3,065 new entrants to the Home Office between 1 October 1985 and 25 February 1987, 1,191 (nearly 39 per cent.) had not returned a completed questionnaire on ethnic origin by the time the figures were collated. It is not possible to say how many have responded, or will respond, at a later date.

Crime and Unemployment

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the percentage increase in the various types of crime since 1979 in London, the inner cities and in the rest of the country, together with such information as he has available concerning any relationship between crime and the rate of unemployment.

Mr. Mellor: Numbers of notifiable offences recorded in police force areas are published each year in the Command Paper "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", and most recently for 1986 in a Home Office "Statistical Bulletin" issue number 4/87 (table 6). Numbers of offences recorded in each London borough in 1978 and 1980 are published in table 147 of "1983-84 Annual Abstract of Greater London Statistics", a copy of which is available in the Library. More recent figures for London boroughs are also placed regularly in the Library.

Research has not shown significant associations between increases in recorded crime and increases in unemployment. The article "Unemployment and Crime" in the Home Office "Research and Planning Research Bulletin No. 14," reviewed research evidence on the association between unemployment and crime and concluded that little could be learnt from studies of this topic at aggregate level.

Bail

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will now undertake a review of the workings of the Bail Act 1976 and report his conclusions to the House.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the operation of the Bail Act 1976 was last reviewed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The use of bail is regularly reviewed, and the information is published each year in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales". We are now looking into the events which led to the grant of bail to Winston Silcott. In the light of that information, we will consider whether there are any lessons to be learnt, and will report our conclusions to the House.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to amend the law so that persons accused of (a) murder and (b) rape may not be granted bail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to a reply given to the hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on 24 March.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the last five years persons on bail, to which police had objected, have committed offences; in how many cases the offence was (a) murder and (b) rape; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in the last two years have been convicted of crimes whilst on bail; and, of those, how many were on bail following murder charges.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Video Monitors

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to seek to amend the law relating to the licensing of television screens used solely as video monitors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have no reason to believe that the present licensing requirements need amendment in this respect.

Murder Statistics

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the percentage increase in non-domestic murders in each of the last five years;

(2) what proportion of people convicted of murder in each of the last five years have committed their offences in domestic circumstances.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information relates to homicide and is published in table 4.4 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1985" (Cm. 10).

Police Act 1964

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases, in each of the past seven years, damages have been paid after judgment under section 48(2)(a) of the Police Act 1964; what has been the average settlement figure for each year; and what was the average damages awarded.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [pursuant to his reply, 2 March 1987, c. 470]: The information in respect of police forces other than the Metropolitan police is not available centrally. For the Metropolitan police I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the information is as follows:

Year	Number of cases in which damages were awarded	Average amount of damages £	Average out of court settlement £
1981	7	2,099	—
1982	9	7,071	1,013
1983	5	571	1,853
1984	7	2,231	—
1985	7	1,993	3,456
1986	10	4,684	6,353

The numbers of cases settled out of court in 1980, 1981 and 1984 are not readily available and the average out of court settlement cannot therefore be calculated. The totals of out of court settlements for these years, however, were £3,397, £10,585 and £162,986 respectively.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authorities (European Regional Development Fund)

70. Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to alter the arrangements under which a local authority area which is eligible for an allocation of finance under the non-quota textile measure and which receives a grant from the European regional development fund, is permitted no corresponding increase in its capital allocation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: Capital allocations for local authorities take account of the expected receipts from the European regional development fund and are higher, therefore, than they would otherwise have been. There are no plans to change this system.

Housing Improvement Programme

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out in a single table the housing improvement programme allocations for the London boroughs of Tower Hamlets, Southwark and Newham, respectively, for each of the years 1980-81 to 1987-88, together with their equivalent in 1987 prices, and their respective index on the base of 1980-81.

Mr. Tracey: For Southwark and Tower Hamlets I refer the hon. Member to the answers given, respectively, to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 17 March, at column 434, and to the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney (Mr. Shore) on 23 February, at columns 90-91. The information requested for Newham is given in the following table, together with corresponding information about the authority's capital expenditure on housing. The latter reflects the use that it has been able to make of the various sources of capital spending power available to it including, since 1981-82, its receipts from the sale of assets.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the compulsory purchase orders proposed by the London Docklands Development Corporation, stating for each the name, number of properties affected, date of inquiry held or proposed and date of confirmation, if made.

Mr. John Patten: The London Docklands Development Corporation has made, or resolved to make, the compulsory purchase orders shown in the table.

The number of properties affected for each CPO is not available. But the nearest approximation, the number of land parcels, is given instead.

The dates of public inquiries already held are also shown. No firm dates are yet available for forthcoming public inquiries.

[1] Approximate

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many housing units built on London Docklands Development Corporation-owned land between July 1981 and December 1986 have been sold to present or former employees of the London Docklands Development Corporation.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not collected.

Local Authorities (Housing Defects)

Mr. Hicks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has allocated all the £14 million specifically designed to assist local authorities with exceptional problems in meeting their obligations under the provisions of the Housing Defects Act; and if he will state the amount requested by the borough of Restormel and the amount granted.

Mr. John Patten: Applications for additional allocations are now being considered. Authorities were not required to bid for a specific amount of resources, and Restormel did not do so.

Canary Wharf

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent by the London Docklands Development Corporation on publicity for the Canary wharf development.

Mr. John Patten: The London Docklands Development Corporation has spent nothing on publicity for the proposed Canary wharf development, other than on statutory advertisements required by the planning application procedures.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the content of the master builder agreement, to be signed by the London Docklands Development Corporation and the Canary wharf developers, is to be made public.

Mr. John Patten: The proposed master building agreement for Canary wharf is a commercially confidential document and will not therefore be made available to the public. But the main features of any agreed proposals would be made public.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what public consultation has been carried out with regard to the master builder agreement soon to be signed by the London Docklands Development Corporation and the consortia of developers for Canary wharf.

Mr. John Patten: There has been no public consultation on the terms of the proposed Canary wharf master building agreement, which is a commercial document. The public and a wide range of organisations have, however, been involved in a series of presentations and discussions about the overall scheme.

Housing Investment Programme

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the housing investment programme allocation in 1979 prices to the London borough of Southwark for each year since 1979.

Mr. Tracey: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 17 March at column 434, to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes). The figures given there can be converted to 1979 prices by using the gross domestic produce deflator at market prices in the annual supplement to the Central Statistical Office publication, Economic Trends, which is in the Library.

Pura Foods (Docklands)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what efforts have been made by the London Docklands Development Corporation to assist Pura Foods to stay at its present location and make use of the river.

Mr. John Patten: Since 1984 the London Docklands Development Corporation has given seven planning permissions to Pura Foods for extensions and improvements to its premises, and is currently considering two further planning applications for development, including a proposed new jetty.

J. J. Prior Ltd. (Docklands)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what alternative use for the J. J. Prior site the London Docklands Development Corporation has planned; what alternative riverside sites have been offered to the firm; if the London Docklands Development Corporation intends to purchase compulsorily the land occupied by J. J. Prior, an aggregate firm on the River Lea; and how many people are employed by J. J. Prior Ltd.

Mr. John Patten: Approximately 30 people are employed by J. J. Prior on this site, which is affected by proposals for a new roundabout at the junction of two major new roads. The LDDC has therefore resolved to acquire the site compulsorily, but its policy is to retain existing local firms within its area wherever possible or to find an alternative site providing the same, or better, facilities. Accordingly, the LDDC is discussing alternative riverside locations with the company.

Water Authorities (Privatisation)

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek from the water authorities information on the expenditure incurred by the (a) Thames water authority, (b) Yorkshire water authority and (c) Trent water authority for all work undertaken in preparation for privatisation.

Mr. John Patten: No.

New Towns

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline future initiatives planned for the residents of new towns.

Mr. John Patten: The Government have proposed target dates by which we expect the new town development corporations substantially to have completed their tasks. We hope then to be able to wind them up. We shall give residents of the towns who are tenants of the corporations or the Commission for the New Towns an opportunity to express their own preferences about the future ownership of their homes. Other Government initiatives will benefit new towns residents in the same way as they benefit our other citizens.

Under-used Land

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce legislation to extend the identification for under-used publicly owned land to land which is under-used and privately owned.

Mr. John Patten: No.

Rate Support Grant, Devon

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the amount of rate support grant paid to each district council in Devon in each of the last five years.

Mr. Chope: The figures requested are as follows:

District Councils in Devon, rate support grant

Note:
The figures for 1982-83 are final entitlements. Domestic rate relief grant figures for 1983-84 and 1984-85 are final entitlements; those for 1985-86 and 1986-87 are first estimates. Block grant figures for 1983-84 and 1984-85 are entitlements after holdback based upon provisional outturn; those for 1985-86 are entitlements after holdback based on budgets; those for 1986-87 are entitlements based on initial budget returns.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what number of inner city properties he estimates will remain derelict should his Department discontinue the rule that the disposal of local authority housing should be at outstanding loan debt or market value, whichever is less;

(2) whether housing association grant will be available in relation to vacant properties which local authorities dispose of at discounted market value;

(3) if he has any plans to change the rule that the disposal of local authority properties to housing associations should be at outstanding loan debt or market value, whichever is less.

Mr. John Patten: The arrangements for transferring vacant local authority housing to housing associations are still being considered in the light of the responses to the Departments' consultation paper of 11 September 1986 on the general consents for the disposal of council houses and land.

Lord Dowding

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is intended to erect a statue to the memory of the late Air Chief Marshal, Lord Dowding, for his leading contribution in the Battle of Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 23 March 1987]: It has been the policy of successive Governments since 1956 not to sponsor further memorials to leaders of the second world war. However, if sufficient public support is forthcoming, my right hon. Friend will consider sympathetically any application for this consent under the Public Statues (Metropolis) Act.

WALES

Venous Leg Ulcers

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost of treating venous leg ulcers in Wales in 1986.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information requested is not available centrally.

Pensioners (Hearing)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of retirement pensioners who have a hearing loss so great that they should benefit from the use of a hearing aid.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information is not available centrally.

NHS Hearing Aids

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on follow-up help for those given National Health Service hearing aids.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Recipients of NHS hearing aids are entitled to replacement batteries and all repairs and servicing of those aids free of charge. The extent to which further follow-up help is provided is a matter for determination by individual district health authorities, in the light of perceived needs and priorities.

Audiological Technicians

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number and location of audiological technicians in the National Health Service in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information, which relates to 30 September 1986, is given in the following table:

Physiological measurement technicians: Audiology

Health authority	Number
Clwyd	9
East Dyfed	5
Gwent	7
Gwynedd	7
Mid Glamorgan	10
South Glamorgan	10
West Glamorgan	11

Blind and Partially Sighted People

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many (i) blind and (ii) partially sighted people there are in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: At 31 March 1986, local authority social services departments in Wales reported 8,362 people registered as blind and 5,240 registered as partially sighted.

Hearing Therapists

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many hearing therapists there are in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The required information is not available centrally.

Audiological Centres

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many specialised audiological centres there are in Wales; what is the waiting time for first appointments at each; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information requested is not available centrally.

Regional Development Grants

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been spent on regional development grants so far in 1986-87 and for each of the financial years since 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Payments of regional development grants in Wales in each financial year since 1979 were as follows:

1979-80	50·7
1980-81	103·5
1981-82	122·2
1982-83	121·5
1983-84	72·1

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of the level of manufacturing investment in Wales in 1986; and what that level was in 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The latest available information on capital expenditure in manufacturing industry in Wales relates to 1985, when it was £563 million at current prices. The figure for 1979, also on a current price basis, was £472 million.

Class Size

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the number of classes and of pupils in classes of more than 30 pupils for each year since 1979.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The available information on the number of classes of more than 30 pupils in the maintained primary and secondary schools sector is as follows:

	Number
1979	4,575
1980	4,100
1981	4,106
1982	3,715
1983	3,511
1984	3,477
1985	3,336

Information on the number of pupils in such classes is not available.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the pupil-teacher ratios for each local education authority for the most recent year for which figures are available, and for 1983 and for 1979.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The overall pupil-teacher ratios in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools are given in the following table:

EMPLOYMENT

Small Unit Business Space

71. Mr. Lawler asked the Paymaster General what representations the Government have received concerning the availability of affordable small unit business space for potential entrepreneurs.

Mr. Trippier: I have received correspondence on this subject from individuals drawing attention to the difficulties they have experienced in obtaining suitable premises available on terms they find satisfactory. The Association of British Chambers of Commerce recently carried out a survey which identified a shortage of premises of up to 1,500 sq ft in some parts of the country.

Hertfordshire (YTS)

Mr. Murphy asked the Paymaster General what is the most recent information about the destination of leavers from YTS schemes in Hertfordshire.

Mr. Trippier: The Manpower Services Commission's regular follow-up survey of YTS leavers shows that of those young people who left schemes in Hertfordshire between April and August 1986 84 per cent. were in employment; 3 per cent. were on a full-time course at a college or training centre; 4 per cent. were on another YTS scheme; 2 per cent. were doing something else; and 8 per cent. were unemployed some three months later.

Disabled People

Mr. Wareing asked the Paymaster General what plans he has to tackle discrimination against disabled people seeking employment.

Mr. Lee: The Government are committed to helping people with disabilities realise their potential for employment. We are encouraging progressive policies among employers through the vigorous promotion of the code of good practice on the employment of disabled people, and providing direct financial assistance through Manpower Services Commission schemes to disabled people with problems finding or retaining a job.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Janner asked the Paymaster General how many people were registered unemployed in Leicester in June 1979; and how many are currently registered unemployed.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. On 14 June 1979, there were 10,854 unemployed registrants in the Leicester jobcentre area. Comparable figures for February 1987 are not available because of changes in the way figures are collected and compiled. However, on 12 February 1987, the number of unemployed claimants in the Leicester local authority district was 18,655.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for June 1979 and the latest available date, the number of male and female full-time and part-time workers on adult rates and the estimated average earnings in each case, and the number of full-time and part-time workers who were temporarily employed in each case; and if he will also provide what estimate he is able to make of similar data for the self-employed and for workers on non-adult rates.

Mr. Lee: Such estimates as are possible are as follows:

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General, on the basis of information obtained from the labour force survey, how many people who were (a) self-employed and (b) employees had been continuously in that employment for (1) less than three months, (2) three months but less than six months, (3) six months but less than one year, (4) one year but less than two years, (5) two years but less than five years, (6) five years but less than 10 years, (7) 10 years but less than 20 years and (8) 20 years or more.

Mr. Lee: Estimates from the preliminary labour force survey results for the spring of 1986 of the length of time persons were either continuously self-employed or in employment as an employee with the same employer, in Great Britain, are as shown in the table.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General what information he has from the general household survey about the economic status of self-employed persons 12 months before they were interviewed; and if he will show separately the proportions that were (a) unemployed, (b) employees, (c) on YOP/YTS and (d) economically inactive.

Mr. Lee: The information is not available in the exact form requested.

The latest available information from the general household survey is for 1984 when 8 per cent. of the self-employed persons in the sample said that 12 months earlier they had been an employee, and 6 per cent. said they had not been working or had been on YOP/YTS; the remaining 86 per cent. said they had been self-employed.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Venous Leg Ulcers

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of treating venous leg ulcers in Northern Ireland in 1986.

Mr. Needham: The expenditure of the health and social services boards is not analysed in such a way to enable the information requested to be separately identified.

Military Patrols

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the accompaniment of military patrols by Royal Ulster Constabulary officers.

Mr. Tom King: It has been for some years the policy of the Chief Constable, which I fully endorse, that wherever resources and circumstances permit, military patrols which are likely to come into contact with the public should be accompanied by RUC officers. This is a reflection of the policy established in 1976 and subsequently reinforced that the police are in the lead in the fight against terrorism, with the Army providing the essential military support.

I understand from the Chief Constable that in applying this policy his operational commanders take into account the function of the military patrol, the area in which it will operate, and the availability of police resources. Priority is therefore given to areas which the local commander knows to be sensitive, where contact with the public is particularly likely, and where a police presence is likely to be particularly helpful in preventing crime and enforcing the law.

I know that it is the Chief Constable's aim to develop and extend the policy wherever circumstances and resources allow.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Overseas Scholarships

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list scholarships awarded, and the numbers of students attending British universities, polytechnics and schools from each country in the Caribbean and central America by (a) Overseas Development Agency, (b) Foreign and Commonwealth Office and (c) British Council, including those awarded under technical co-opertion for the last five years, showing also how much they cost and where they were held.

Mr. Eggar: I regret that detailed information on individual scholarships is not readily available in the form requested by my hon. Friend and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. no scholarships are awarded to schoolchildren from overseas. Details of the numbers of awards made and overall expenditure by country are as follows:

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make the gathering of information on ethnic origins compulsory, and publish the percentage of entrants to his Department who failed to respond to the ethnic origins questionnaire.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to her by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 24 March. Surveys of the ethnic origin of staff in post and new entrants to the diplomatic and development wings of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office have been carried out on the basis of voluntary self-classification in accordance with the agreement reached between the Civil Service and the Council of Civil Service Unions. There are no plans at present to change to a compulsory system. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office will consider any practical ways of improving the data base which are agreed between the Civil Service and the Council of Civil Service Unions. 49 per cent. of new entrants to the development wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office between 1 October 1985 and 28 February 1987 failed to respond to the ethnic origins questionnaire. The corresponding figure for new entrants to the diplomatic wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office between 1 April 1986 and 28 February 1987 was 55 per cent.

The results of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office surveys will be included in the London and south-east and East Anglia staff-in-post surveys later this year.

Henry Gombya

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which a British diplomat in Uganda drove to the airport a journalist, Henry Gombya, wanted in connection with a murder investigation; and what assessment he has made of the likely impact of the incident on British-Ugandan relations.

Mrs. Chalker: The deputy high commissioner in Kampala drove Mr. Gombya to the airport only after Mr. Gombya had obtained firm assurances from the Ugandan authorities that he was not wanted in connection with any murder investigation. Mr. Gombya left openly and unchallenged. I foresee no impact on our relations with Uganda.

British Presidency (Ministerial Speech)

Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he intends to place in the Library a copy of his forthcoming speech to the London Chamber of Commerce on 3 April on the subject of the British Presidency.

Mrs. Chalker: Yes.

SCOTLAND

Venous Leg Ulcers

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of treating venous leg ulcers in Scotland in 1986.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not centrally available.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the pupil-teacher ratios for primary and secondary schools in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: The latest date for which information is available is September 1985—when the ratios for primary and secondary were 20·4:1 and 13·5:1 respectively. That information is contained in Scottish Education Department "Statistical Bulletin No. 4/B1/1986", a copy of which is in the Library.

Weekly Incomes

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average weekly income of residents in the constituencies of Greenock and Port Glasgow and Perth and Kinross.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is not available.

Rivers and Estuaries (Survey)

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when the results of the 1985 survey of Scottish rivers and estuaries will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The report of the 1985 water quality survey of Scotland (Water Quality Survey of Scotland 1985, Scottish Development Department, Her Majesty's Stationery Office, Price £7·00: ISBN 0 11 493382 0) which deals with the quality of the rivers, canals and estuaries in Scotland is being published today. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

The report demonstrates that the overall quality of Scottish waters continues to improve. More than 99 per cent. of the total length of Scottish rivers are now either unpolluted or of fairly good quality. While some local stretches of rivers show slight deterioration due to pollution from agricultural sources and from mining activity, overall 419 km are of higher quality than in 1980. Grossly polluted or poor quality rivers have reduced by 74 km.

Of the major estuaries, Montrose Basin and that of the River Garnock in Ayrshire showed marked improvement in water quality.

These improvements may be attributed in the main to investment by local authorities and industrialists in improved effluent treatment plant and to the efforts of the river purification boards, whose responsibilities include controlling and monitoring discharges. Overall, the progress is most encouraging.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Lloyd's (Police Inquiries)

3. Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects the police inquiries into the affair involving Ian Postgate, Lloyd's, and Alexander Howden to be completed; and when he expects to publish the report.

Mr. Channon: Police inquiries are well advanced. However, no date for completion can be given.

As I said on 26 January in a reply to a written question from the hon. Member, the interim report of the Inspectors appointed under Section 165(1) (b) of the Companies Act 1948 (Section 432(2) of the Companies Act 1985) to investigate and report on the affairs of Alexander Howden Group plc cannot be published while police inquiries continue.

Mergers

12. Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will review the law regarding the control of merger situations affecting Wales.

Mr. Howard: The law on the control of mergers in the United Kingdom as a whole, which naturally includes mergers affecting Wales, is currently under review.

65. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, in assessing mergers and takeovers by foreign companies, he takes reciprocity of rules into account.

Mr. Howard: In assessing mergers and merger proposals, my right hon. Friend takes into account all matters which may have a bearing on the public interest in that particular case.

CBI

16. Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of the Confederation of British Industry; and what was discussed.

Mr. Channon: I last met representatives of the Confederation of British Industry at the National Economic Development Council on 4 February. Subjects discussed included skill shortages, management development and a report from the Specialised Organics Economic Development Committee.

Regional Development Grants

17. Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been spent on regional development grants in England so far in 1986-87; what he expects to spend in 1987-88; and if he will provide figures for Yorkshire and Humberside.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The provisional figures for payments of regional development grants in 1986-87 to end-February are £226·8 million in England, and £24·4 million in the Yorkshire and Humberside region. The 1987-88 provision for RDGs in England, as incorporated in the Supply Estimates, is £105 million. Future provision for expenditure on RDGs is not allocated at the regional level; the actual distribution will depend on the pattern of demand.

46. Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been spent on regional development grants in England so far in 1986-87; what he expects to spend in 1987-88; and if he will provide figures for the north.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Provisional figures for payments of regional development grants (RDGs) in 1986-87 to end-February are £226·8 million in England, and £90·6 million in the northern region. The 1987-88 provision for RDGs for England, as incorporated in the Supply Estimates, is £105 million. Future provision for expenditure on RDGs is not allocated at the regional level: the actual distribution will depend on the pattern of demand.

Insider Dealing

18. Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many investigations into insider dealing are currently being conducted by his Department.

33. Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many investigations into insider dealing are currently being conducted by his Department.

45. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many investigations into insider dealing are currently being conducted by his Department.

Mr. Howard: Charges have been laid in two cases. Five cases are under investigation and in addition five cases are being considered for investigation.

Alnwick and Amble

19. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received regarding plans to assist in the promotion of industry in the Alnwick and Amble area.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I have received several representations about Alnwick and Amble relating mainly to assisted area status.

Manufactured Goods

20. Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his current estimate of the deficit in trade in manufactured goods for 1987.

47. Mr. Stott asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his current estimate for the deficit in trade in manufactured goods for 1987.

54. Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his current estimate of the deficit in trade in manufactured goods for 1987.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his "Financial Statement and Budget Report" estimates that the deficit for 1987 in the balance of trade in manufactures will be £8 billion.

Invisible Trade

21. Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his Department's practice on publishing figures for invisible trade.

59. Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his Department's practice on publishing figures for invisible trade.

68. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his Department's practice on publishing figures for invisible trade.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department publishes monthly estimates of invisible trade in the monthly press notice on trade statistics. The invisibles estimates are compiled and supplied by the Central Statistical Office. For the most recent periods, the statisticians publish a projection in round numbers until data become available to them. Monthly surveys of invisibles transactions are not conducted. Monthly figures are conventionally shown as one third of the corresponding quarter's figure.

British Design Talent

22. Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans for further policy initiatives to promote the use of British design talent by British companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My Department already runs an extensive programme to promote better use of good design by United Kingdom industry and commerce. We are considering further ideas for that programme which were suggested at a design seminar held by the Prime Minister in January, particularly measures to stimulate more and closer links between industry and higher education on design issues.

I am also developing new proposals to make expert design and related advice available direct to smaller firms on a regional basis. The aim will be to help such firms identify and pursue new, market led product opportunities and so improve their business prospects. Further details will be announced as soon as possible.

Manufacturing Industry

23. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about the fall in the real value of manufacturing investment in the east midlands since 1979.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Manufacturing investment is one of many subjects on which I receive representations. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 25 February at column 281.

26. Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about the fall in the real value of manufacturing investment in the west midlands since 1979.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Manufacturing investment is one of many subjects on which I receive representations. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher) on 25 February at column 281.

27. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the latest figures for investment in manufacturing industry.

Mr. Pattie: Investment in manufacturing industry was nearly 20 per cent. higher in 1986 than in 1983; even though it was some 5 per cent. down on 1985. The underlying determinants of manufacturing investment—sustained growth in the ecomomy, improved profitability and a low rate of inflation—are very favourable and forecasters expect a significant increase in manufacturing investment in 1987.

35. Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next intends to meet the Trades Union Congresss to discuss investment in manufacturing industry.

Mr. Pattie: My right hon. Friend and I meet the TUC regularly at the National Economic Development Council, where matters relevant to improving industrial performance are discussed. I have no plans for a separate meeting on this subject.

Consumer Protection (Prohibition Orders)

24. Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many prohibition orders have been made under consumer protection legislation since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Seven prohibition orders have been made under the Consumer Safety Act 1978 since 1979. There were:

The Balloon-Making Compounds (Safety) Order 1979
The Tear Gas Capsules (Safety) Order 1979
The Children's Furniture (Safety) Order 1982
[1]The Toy Water Snakes (Safety) Order 1983
The Gas Catalytic Heaters (Safety) Order 1983
[1]The Expanding Novelties (Safety) Order 1983
The Scented Erasers (Safety) Order 1984

[1] Prohibition orders last for 12 months. The Toy Water Snakes (Safety) Order 1983 and the Expanding Novelties (Safety) Order 1983 have lapsed, the products having been removed from the market. The remainder were subsequently covered by regulations made under the Consumer Safety Act 1978.

Caterpillar Tractor Company

25. Mr. James Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further part he has played in the discussions concerning the proposed closure of the Caterpillar Tractor Company, Tammershields, Glasgow.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Since my meeting with senior Caterpillar executives on 20 January my officials have kept in touch with the Scottish Office and with the company generally on matters relating to the closure decision. In addition, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry together with my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland, has met a delegation from the ASTMS parliamentary committee on this matter.

48. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further meetings he has had with representatives of Caterpillar in 1987; what subjects were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I have had no meetings with the company since I last met senior Caterpillar executives on 20 January. My officials are, however, in touch with the company generally on matters relating to the closure decision.

Company Law

28. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals the European Commission is currently considering for the harmonisation of company law.

Mr. Howard: Details of proposals being discussed by the staff of the European Commission with member states or private interests and of directives being discussed by the Council of Ministers are contained in my Department's booklet "Harmonisation of Company and related law in the European Community", copies of which are in the Library.

30. Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to seek to reform company law on nominee shareholdings.

Mr. Channon: The possibility of changing company law on nominee shareholdings and other matters is already under consideration as part of the review of the operations of the takeover panel which I announced in the House on 28 January. Both I and companies concerned have powers under the Companies Act 1985 to inquire into the ownership of shares. The Act also provides, in certain circumstances, for the restriction of rights attaching to shares in the event of inadequate responses to such inquiries.

New Technology

29. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards the promotion of new technology.

Mr. Pattie: The Government's policies are creating a business climate that encourages and rewards enterprise, thereby stimulating the development and application of new technologies.

In addition, many of the measures of assistance offered by my Department under the Science and Technology Act 1965 are concerned with the promotion and rapid adoption of new technologies.

Airbus

31. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement regarding Government funding for the Airbus A330 and A340 series.

Mr. Pattie: The Government's consideration of British Aerospace's application for launch aid for the A330-A340 is well advanced, and discussions are taking place with the company. A decision will be taken as soon as possible.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he now expects to announce his decision on Airbus A330-A340 launch aid.

Mr. Pattie: The Government aim to reach a decision on British Aerospace's application for launch aid for the A30-A340 as soon as possible. An announcement will be made thereafter.

36. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to announce a decision on Airbus A330-A340 launch aid.

Mr. Pattie: The Government are aiming to reach a decision as soon as possible. An announcement will be made thereafter.

Jaguar

32. Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the latest figures for vehicle production and employment at Jaguar as compared with 1984.

Mr. Butcher: Jaguar production in 1986 was 41,437 units, 24 per cent. higher than the 1984 total of 33,437. Employment at the end of February this year was 11,731, some 2,500 higher than in August 1984 when the company was privatised.

Association of British Chambers of Commerce

34. Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State last met representatives of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce on 10 December 1986 when he discussed a wide range of industrial and commercial matters with the association's economic and industrial committee.

Bathroom Ceramics and Fittings

37. Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received concerning the effects of imports on the bathroom ceramics and fittings industry; and what response he has given.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department has received a number of representations from the bathroom ceramics and fittings industry about the effect of imports.

My officials have already held meetings to discuss the issues with representatives from the industry and are now consulting their colleagues in the Department of Environment about possible further action.

Westland plc

38. Mr. Ray Powell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to respond to the Trade and Industry Committee's report on Westland plc.

Mr. Channon: Yesterday I wrote to the Chairman of the Committee with the Government's response to this report.

National Space Plan

39. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement on the national space plan.

Mr. Pattie: The Government are considering the space plan and hope to come to a decision soon.

Power Station Equipment

40. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the value of power station equipment exported in 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Power station equipment is not separately identified in the "Overseas Trade Statistics". The information is, therefore, not available.

Research and Development

41. Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the current objectives of research and development funding from his Department.

Mr. Pattie: The objectives of my Department's research and development policy are to:

encourage industry to increase its own investment in research and development in line with other advanced industrial countries.

seek to secure more effective exploitation of national and international science and technology.

promote awareness and rapid adoption of key technologies.

help industry to achieve levels of quality and design matching the highest world standards.

encourage closer links between producers and customers for new products through, for example, public purchasing.

62. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the current and planned levels of public spending on research and development devoted to manufacturing industry.

Mr. Pattie: The information could only be provided at disproportionate cost since my Department does not record for all its schemes the amount of support going to different industrial sectors. However, it may be estimated that in 1986-87 my Department is likely to spend £280 million on research and development devoted to manufacturing industry and £310 million, £330 million, and £340 million in the three succeeding years.

Polarisation

42. Mr. Butterfill asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive a report from the Director General of Fair Trading on the principle of polarisation in connection with the sale of life assurance and similar investments.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. friend the Secretary of State received on 23 March the Director General's report on the effect on competition of the proposed rules, regulations, guidance and arrangements of the Securities and Investments Board, including the rules which provide for the polarisation of life insurance and unit trust intermediaries. A copy has been placed in the Library. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will consider the report in forming a judgment on whether SIB satisfies the criteria for the transfer of functions to it under the Financial Services Act, 1986.

Footwear (Chamberlain Phipps)

43. Mr. John Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment his Department has made of the effect upon the footwear industry of the proposed takeover of Chamberlain Phipps by Wardle Storeys.

69. Mr. Fry asked the Secretary of State of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received relating to the implications for the British footwear industry of the proposed takeover bid by Wardle Storey for Chamberlain Phipps.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has received no representations from the footwear industry on this subject. He makes his decision on whether a qualifying merger should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for further investigation in the light of advice from the Director General of Fair Trading. Both my right hon. Friend and the Director General take into account all relevant aspects of a proposal, including its potential effects on the markets concerned. My right hon. Friend this morning announced his decision not to refer this merger to the MMC. His decision was in accordance with the Director General's recommendation.

Consultants (Overseas Contracts)

44. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will review the scope and level of support given by his Department to United Kingdom consultants seeking contracts abroad; and what information he has as to how this compares with other Governments' assistance to their consultants.

Mr. Alan Clark: British consultants have benefited substantially from the Government's contribution to multilateral aid agencies, from our bilateral aid programme, and from the services available under the schemes of support administered by the British Overseas Trade Board. Direct comparisons are difficult, but the opportunities created compare favourably with those available to foreign competitors.

Regional Aid Maps

49. Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to review the existing regional aid maps; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I have no plans to review assisted area coverage and would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for South Ribble (Mr. Atkins) on 17 February at columns 526-27.

Regional Aid (Wales)

50. Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was his Department's total expenditure on regional aid to industry in Wales during the last year for which figures are available; and what was the corresponding figure for 1978-79.

Mr. Butcher: Expenditure by my Department on regional development grants and regional selective assistance in Wales was £98·3 million in 1978-79, and £1·6 million in 1985-86. Expenditure on regional aid to industry in Wales is now almost entirely undertaken by the Welsh Office. Responsibility for expenditure on regional development grants in Wales transferred from my Department to the Welsh Office in November 1984. Taking account of Welsh Office expenditure, the amount spent in Wales in 1985-86 under these headings represented some 22 per cent. of the total for Great Britain.

Export Aid

51. Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much export aid has been provided to companies in the northern region in each year since 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: The full range of Government export support services is available to companies in all regions. However, the Department does not collate statistics which would show the full use made of these services by companies in individual regions. While figures are available which would show the number of firms which have, with the support of the British Overseas Trade Board, participated in overseas missions and exhibited at overseas fairs, these would not provide a complete picture of all the support made available. For example, figures are not available on a regional basis for expenditure under the export marketing research scheme and the overseas projects fund, two of the more significant sources of direct financial support to exporters.

Origin Marking

52. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has to protect British industries, including textiles, made-up clothing and cutlery, in relation to origin marking.

Mr. Howard: The Government are currently considering, in the light of consultation with consumer and industry associations, the scope for introducing measures to replace the origin marking requirements of the Trade Descriptions Act 1972. Repeal of the 1972 Act is necessary for reasons of Community law and provision for this is made in the Consumer Protection Bill.

Manufacturing Investment

53. Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about the fall in the real value of manufacturing investment in the north since 1979.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Manufacturing investment is one of many subjects on which I receive representations. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Jarrow (Mr. Dixon) on 25 February at columns 203-204.

60. Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about the fall in the real value of manufacturing investment in Yorkshire and Humberside since 1979.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Manufacturing investment is one of many subjects on which I receive representations. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 25 February at column 281.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his latest estimate of the level of manufacturing investment in 1986.

Mr. Pattie: In 1986 manufacturing investment (including leased assets) is estimated to have been £6,620 million (in 1980 prices).

City Institutions (Self-regulation)

55. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to introduce amending legislation in relation to arrangements for self-regulating organisations' monitoring of City institutions.

Mr. Howard: No.

Monopolies and Mergers

56. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he now expects to be in a position to bring forward new proposals in relation to Her Majesty's Government's policy on monopolies and mergers.

Mr. Howard: Work on the review of law and policy on mergers and restrictive trade practices is continuing. Meanwhile, if changes of policy within existing law are identified as desirable, the Government will not hesitate to implement them.

Medicines (Licence of Right)

57. Dame Jill Knight asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to introduce legislation to remove the licence of right provisions of the Patents Act 1977 as they apply to medicines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: The Government wish to remove medicines from the scope of the licence of right provisions in Schedule 1 to the Patents Act 1977 and therefore support Lord Northfield's Bill which has been introduced in another place for this purpose.

Japan

58. Mr. John Townend asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action the Government intend to take over the next year to reduce the United Kingdom trade deficit with Japan; and what is his latest estimate of that deficit.

Mr. Alan Clark: We continue to press the Japanese Government to take all necessary steps to bring about a reduction in their trade surpluses. Such steps will need to include further market opening, the implementation of structural reform and stimulation of domestic demand. From the provisional figures for the 12 months ended December 1986, United Kingdom trade with Japan showed a balance of trade deficit of £3·7 billion.

Textile Closures (European Regional Development Fund)

61. Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the formula and methodology used to allocated European regional development fund non-quota section assistance to textile closure areas.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The areas in the United Kingdom eligible for aid from the European regional development fund under the non-quota textile areas regulation (219-84) were Northern Ireland, Tayside, and three groups of travel-to-work areas in England (in West Yorkshire, Lancashire and Greater Manchester). The allocation to eligible areas in the United Kingdom's programme of the aid available from the ERDF was based on statistics relating to Northern Ireland and to the individual eligible TTWAs in England and Scotland. Half of the total allocation was distributed according to each area's share of the total of job losses in the textile and clothing industries between 1976 and 1981 in all the areas. A further quarter of the allocation was made in proportion to the product of multiplying each area's annual average unemployment rate for 1983 by the number of jobs lost in the textile and clothing industries in the area between 1976 and 1981. The final quarter of the allocation was distributed according to the dependency of the areas on textile and clothing employment. Dependency was measured in two ways, equal weight being given to each criterion. The first was the number of jobs in the textile and clothing industries in each area in 1976. The second was the percentage of manufacturing jobs in the area in 1976 in the textile and clothing industry multiplied by the number of textile and clothing jobs in that area in that year.

The initial allocation was then modified by allocating a minimum of 1 million ecu to each individual area and adjusting the allocations to other areas downwards proportionately so as to arrive at the same total figure. Finally the allocations to Tayside and the three groups of TTWAs in England were aggregrated to form four block allocations.

National Quality Campaign

63. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many companies have been contacted by his Department in respect to the awareness campaign in quality assurance techniques.

Mr. Butcher: We estimate that over 50,000 companies have been contacted through the national quality campaign since its launch in 1983.

Cars (United Kingdom Content)

64. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the latest figures for the United Kingdom content of cars produced by the major United Kingdom-based manufacturers.

Mr. Butcher: According to the latest information available from each of the major United Kingdom-based vehicle manufacturers, the United Kingdom content of the cars which they produce here is as follows (the figures cover varying periods):

	Per cent.
Austin Rover	95
Ford	83
Jaguar	95
Lotus	89
Peugeot Talbot	60
Vauxall	50

Inward Investment

66. Mr. Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many jobs are estimated to have been created by inward investment since 1979.

Mr. Butcher: From information provided to the Invest in Britain Bureau by the companies themselves, it is estimated that nearly 148,000 new jobs will be created as a result of inward investment decisions taken within the years 1979 to 1986 inclusive. Many more jobs will have been safeguarded.

Marler Estates (Insider Dealing)

67. Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will initiate an investigation into the possible contravention of the Company Securities (Insider Dealings) Act 1985 in transactions affecting the shares of Marler Estates.

Mr. Howard: When I am satisfied that there are grounds for doing so.

Regional Aid

Mr. William Powell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will list in the Official Report the amounts and recipients of funds from the European regional development fund amongst companies in the Corby travel-to-work area since 1 May 1979.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The current Corby TTWA is eligible for aid under the main quota section of the European regional development fund. Aid for industrial projects committed under the main ERDF regulation does not go to the company concerned but is retained by central government in accordance with the provisions of article 36 of that regulation, thus enabling the total amount of United Kingdom regional industrial assistance to be higher than would otherwise be the case. Details of successful applications under the United Kingdom's quota are published in "British Business".

In addition, small enterprises in the pre-1984 Corby travel-to-work-area are eligible for support under non quota measures in respect of certain steel closure areas. Under the first round of these measures, covering the period 1982-84, commitment to such enterprises from the ERDF totalled £0·255 million. In the second round measures, covering the period 1984-89, £2·03 million has been allocated to the Corby TTWA, for the business improvement service package of schemes. £1·8 million of this is being contributed by the ERDF, but not all of the allocation has yet been committed to applicants. Details of individual payments made under the first round measures are not readily available. A list of individual payments made under the second round measures, as at end February 1987, is set out below.

Insider Trading

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, pursuant to his reply dated 19 February, Official Report, column 750, concerning insider trading, he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each quarter since 1 January 1983 the number of cases referred to his Department and the number of these which are not at present subject to investigation; how many cases are now under investigation; how many arose out of investigations by the United States authorities; and when he expects more prosecutions to be brought.

Mr. Howard: The numbers are as follows. I am not able to provide information about confidential exchanges with the United States authorities, or to forecast when proceedings may be instituted.

Year and quarter	Total	Not under current investigation	Under current investigation

The category of cases "not under investigation" includes those cases where charges have been laid and those where investigation is being considered.
Note 2:
The current position is as follows:
Charges have been laid in two cases; five cases are under investigation; in addition, five cases are being considered for investigation.

Finished Manufactures

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1957, 1967, 1973, 1979, 1985 and 1986 imports and exports of finished manufactures as a percentage of manufacturing output and of gross domestic product.

Mr. Alan Clark: Because trade in finished manufactures is not available on the same classification as output data, it is not possible to make a direct comparison; however, the following table should be of assistance:

	[1]Finished manufactures as percentage of total [2]manufactures		Trade as percentage of total sales of manufactured [3]products		Contribution of manufacturing industry[3] to GDP percentage

Joint Industrial Ventures (United Kingdom-USSR)

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what review has been carried out by his Department of the rules and regulations for joint industrial ventures between the United Kingdom and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics promulgated by the Soviet Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department is constantly monitoring such information as it becomes available on Soviet joint venture legislation and providing advice to companies considering joint venture proposals. My Department was represented at the Anglo-Soviet economic conference organised by the CBI at the end of February at which Soviet experts and British companies discussed the opportunities for joint ventures in the Soviet Union. However, it is for companies themselves to decide whether to enter into joint ventures and to negotiate acceptable terms with benefits for both partners.

Guinness plc

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has yet received his inspectors' report of their investigations into Guinness plc; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: No, the inspectors have not submitted their report and I cannot give details of their investigation while it is in progress.

Midlands Area Coalfields

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he plans to give assisted area status to the midlands area coalfields; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I have no plans to extend coverage of the assisted areas beyond those parts of the midlands area coalfields which are already designated. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for South Ribble (Mr. Atkins) on 17 February at columns 526-27.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk Quotas

Sir Richard Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many dairy farmers have sold their milk quotas.

Mr. Gummer: The total number of quota transfers registered by the Milk Marketing Board in England and Wales since the milk quota system was established in 1984 is 5,618. It is not possible to say how many producers disposed of their entire quota in these transactions. Additionally, under the Milk Supplementary Levy (Outgoers) Scheme 1984 a total of 1,686 producers from England and Wales gave up their entire quota. Successful applicants under the Community outgoers scheme will not surrender their quota until 1 April 1987.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make the gathering of information on ethnic origins compulsory, and publish the percentage of entrants to his Department who failed to respond to the ethnic origins questionnaire.

Mr. Jopling: On the policy issues, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 24 March. On response rates I regret that I cannot add to the information given to the hon. Member on 9 March at column 87.

Farming Co-operatives

Mr. Colvin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many registered farming co-operatives there are in England and Wales; how many farms these include; and how many farming co-operatives there are in other Economic Community for farmers wishing to establish farming co-operatives.

Mr. Gummer: The Government do not collect statistics on farming co-operatives. However, the Plunkett foundation for co-operative studies at Oxford estimates that there are 540 agricultural and horticultural farming co-operatives in England and Wales involved in trading. In addition, there are machinery syndicates and co-operatives concerned with pest control and other activities. No figures are available on the number of farms involved in co-operation. Statistics on farming co-operatives in the EC countries are due to be published shortly and I will write to my hon. Friend when they are available.

Mr. Colvin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what financial assistance is available from his Department or from the European Economic Community and farmers wishing to establish farming co-operatives.

Mr. Gummer: Under the agricultural and horticultural co-operation scheme 1985 non-capital grants of up to 75 per cent. are available towards the cost of setting up a co-operative association. The scheme also provides for grants of about one-third towards the marketing costs of newly established co-operatives in three of their first five years. Capital grants are also available at varying rates. Under EC Regulation 1035/72 launching aid can be aid for five years to formally recognised prolducer groups in the fruit and vegetables sector, based on a percentage of historic turnover and a percentage of administrative costs.

Mr. Colvin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much financial assistance has been provided by his Department to farming co-operatives in each of the years since 1979.

Mr. Gummer: Expenditure in the United Kingdom on grants to farming co-operatives has been as follows:

Financial years	Agricultural and Horticultural Co-operation Scheme (AHCS) (excluding forage groups) £'000s	EC Reg 1035/72 launching aid to producer organizations in fruit and vegetable sectors £'000s	AHCS grants to forage groups under EC regulation 797/85 £'000s	Total £'000s

1983-84	3,789	601	42	4,432

1985-86	4,260	1,247	141	5,648
1986-87[1]	2,500	770	350	3,620

[1] Estimated.

Mr. Colvin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his definition for the purposes of financial assistance from (a) his Department and (b) the European Economic Community, of a farming co-operative.

Mr. Gummer: The following may be eligible for grant:

(a) "A co-operative association" or "recognised group" defined in paragraph 2(1) of the Agricultural and Horticultural Co-operation Scheme 1985. The second definition is for the purposes of grant to forage groups in the Less Favoured Areas under Article 17 of the EC Regulation 797/85. In both cases the applicant must be a registered society under Industrial and Provident Societies Acts or a body which Food From Britain are satisfied is in substance a co-operative association.

(b) A "Producers' organisation" in the fruit and vegetables sector defined in Article 13 of EC Regulation 1035/72. In essence it must aim to improve marketing by requiring members to sell all their produce through the organisation and apply production and marketing rules.

Factors in addition to these definitions are taken into account in deciding whether grant can be approved in any particular case.

Farm Animal Welfare Council

Mr. Corbett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date the Farm Animal Welfare Council regulations group was set up; on what date its phase one report was received by Ministers; and on what date he expects to receive its phase two report.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The council's regulations group held its first meeting on 11 November 1982 and presented its interim statement of proposed welfare regulations to Agriculture Ministers on 7 November 1986. The group is currently engaged on a study of pig production systems, the report of which I expect to receive around the end of this year.

Badgers

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he intends to take with regard to Professor Dunnet's recommendations on the future of the consultative panel on badgers and tuberculosis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have accepted Professor Dunnet's recommendation that the consultative panel should be kept in being. And, as further recommended, we have discussed with the panel's membership what changes could usefully be made in its composition and operation.

As a result of these discussions we have agreed that it would be desirable for the panel to have an independent chairman as is the case with the majority of similar Government advisory bodies. We are therefore appointing Mr. Mark Thomasin-Foster, an Essex farmer and National Vice-Chairman of the Farming and Wildlife Advisory Group to this post. We believe Mr. Thomasin-Foster's background in both farming and conservation make him particularly well equipped for this role. Other appointments to the panel will be made shortly. In the light of Professor Dunnet's recommendations we have also amended the terms of reference of the panel, in particular to reflect more accurately the objective of our policy on badgers and bovine tuberculosis. The terms of reference are now:

(i) to keep under review the evidence relating to bovine tuberculosis in badgers, including its distribution, its prevalence and its relationship to bovine tuberculosis in cattle;

(ii) to advise on operations to be undertaken by the Ministry in order to limit the transmission of tuberculosis from badgers to cattle;

(iii) to recommend research appropriate to the problem of badgers and bovine tuberculosis.

Radioactivity

Mr. Baldry asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what restrictions are at present imposed, or have recently been imposed, on the movement, sale and consumption of animal and vegetable products, live or dead, as a direct or indirect result of radioactive contamination anywhere in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson [pursuant to his reply, 24 March 1987]: In June and July 1986, restrictions were imposed on the movement and slaughter of sheep in parts of Cumbria, North Wales and Scotland. Today, less than 7 per cent. of the sheep originally subject to restriction remain under control. No restrictions have been imposed on other animals or foodstuffs since testing has shown radioactivity levels to be well below those at which precautionary action to protect public health would have been necessary.

Food Aid Scheme

Mrs. Shields asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of food available for distribution under the European Economic Community food aid scheme has now been delivered.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 24 March 1987]: We have set no quantitative limits to the amounts of the foodstuffs concerned which may be distributed within these arrangements.

SOCIAL SERVICES

National Insurance

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will provide the fullest available information on the income levels of those paying class 4 national insurance contributions for each year since 1979;

(2) if he will provide the best available estimate of the numbers of individuals paying class 4 national insurance contributions for each year from 1957 to the latest available date.

Mr. Major: Class 4 contributions have been payable only since the 1975-76 tax year. Information on the actual number of class 4 contributors is not available but the estimates shown which have been derived from the Inland Revenue's income survey, give a good indication of the numbers involved. They will contain some over-statement —which is unlikely to be substantial—as they include those not liable to pay class 4 contributions because of being over retirement age or of being concurrently employed as employed earners and paying the maximum national insurance in class 1 and class 2 contributions.

(1) The Inland Revenue's income survey is a statistical sample survey of taxpayers' records. The components of each column in the above table may not equal its total because of rounding.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will bring up to date for the year 1987-88 the information given in his answer of 10 December, Official Report, column 204, to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby concerning the distribution of incomes and national insurance contributions, adding (a) the saving on the abolition of the reduced rate contribution and (b) the numbers contracted-in and contracted-out together with their contributions.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing his forecast for 1987-88 of the number of class 2 and class 4 contributions for men and women together with the forecast revenue in each case.

Mr. Major: The information is as follows:

1987-88 Great Britain

	Class 2
Number of contributors (thousands)
Men	1,900
Women	200
Contributions Payable (£ million)
Men	360

It is estimated that in 1987-88 there will be about 1½ million people liable to pay class 4 contributions amounting to £400 million in a full year, and that about 10 per cent. of these figures relate to self-employed women.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish in the Official Report the number of females expected to qualify for the reduced rate of national insurance in the next financial year in return for reduced benefits, the amounts of revenue forgone as a result of this concession and the estimated cost if the recipients were able to claim full benefit.

Mr. Major: It is expected that during 1987-88 an average of 1·1 million females in Great Britain will be paying class 1 national insurance at the reduced rate for widows and married women. It is estimated that the full year cost of this concession (in 1987-88) in terms of lower contribution revenue will be £200 million. It is impossible to estimate reliably the additional benefit expenditure if those paying reduced rate contributions could claim full benefit.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish in the Official Report a table giving an estimated breakdown for 1987-88 of national insurance contributions on the same basis as in table 40.13 of "Social Security Statistics 1985", together with the appropriate contribution for employees and their employers, and his estimate of the revenue therefrom in each case.

Mr. Major: Information in the form requested is not available as the Government Actuary does not estimate the number of people paying national insurance contributions on the same basis as in table 40.13 published in "Social Security Statistics 1985". The following information is available:

Estimated Average Number of Contributors 1987-88 Great Britain

Class 2	360		40				400
Class 3	20		5				25

Notes:
(1) Estimated full year contributions yield payable in 1987-88.
(2) All estimates are based on the assumption used in the Report by Government Actuary on the drafts of the Social Security Benefits Up-rating (No. 2) Order 1986 and the Social Security (Contributions, Re-rating (No. 2) Order 1986 (CM24).

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated cost of a reduction of one percentage point in the employee's and the employer's national insurance contribution in 1987-88; and if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1957 the rate of contribution in each case as a percentage of average earnings, together with the standard rate of income tax on earned income.

Mr. Major: It is estimated that a reduction of one percentage point in the rates of national insurance contributions in 1987-88 will cost for the full year £1,590 million in respect of employees' contributions, and £1,770 million in respect of employers' contributions.

I shall answer the remainder of the hon. Member's question as soon as possible.

NHS (Competitive Tendering)

Mr. Ames asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of annual savings which the National Health Service has achieved due to the competitive tendering of hospital cleaning, catering and laundry services.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) on 19 March at columns 613-24.

Prescriptions

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out the details of the different systems by which prescriptions are dispensed and charges collected through (a) doctors and (b) pharmacists; what is the estimated effect on revenue (i) in the United Kingdom and (ii) in Gwynedd of the present system; if he will introduce the same system for doctors as for pharmacists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Pharmacists dispense prescriptions on payment of the appropriate charge, unless a declaration that the patient is entitled to be exempted from paying the charge has been completed and signed. Pharmacists retain the charges collected and the sum involved is subsequently deducted from their remuneration.

Dispensing doctors dispense prescriptions on payment of the appropriate charge, unless the patient has declared that he or she is entitled to be exempted from paying the charge. It is for the doctor to decide whether an oral declaration will suffice. Dispensing doctors remit the charges they collect to family practitioner committees at monthly intervals.

We have no plans to change these arrangements.

The total prescription charge income for England in 1985-86 was £127·756 million which includes prescription charge income from dispensing doctors of £7·07 million. It is estimated that, in 1985-86, £5·8 million of income was not collected as a result of incorrect claims to exemption. It is not possible to break this figure down between pharmacists and dispensing doctors.

For Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland the information sought is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend, the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Northern Ireland.

Bisolvon

Mr. Ray Powell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, following the removal of Bisolvon from the selected list of National Health Service drugs scheme and the manufacturers' decision to discontinue this drug, what arrangements have been made for those patients who are dependent on Bisolvon and can find no alternative medication.

Mr. Newton: The product licences of right for Bisolvon were withdrawn at the request of the licence holder on 31 December 1986.

Section 9 of the Medicines Act 1968 provides exemption from the licensing requirements to enable a doctor to administer an unlicensed medicinal product to a particular patient of his. Information on the availability of this drug for such use would be a matter for the supplier.

An adequate range of alternative medicines remains available on the National Health Service.

Benefits (Claimants)

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average amount received per household in supplementary benefit in the London borough of Southwark in January 1987 and the equivalent dates since 1979.

Mr. Lyell: No information is available about the average amount of supplementary benefit received per household in the London borough of Southwark. The following information relates to the average amount of supplementary benefit per claimant in the social security London south region. Some households contain more than one claimant.

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all the persons originally appointed as chairs of family practitioner committees according to district health authority areas; the occupation they held at the time of appointment; which have been re-appointed and which not; of those not re-appointed, who replaced them; and in each case, what was their occupation.

Pharmacists (Liability)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance is given to pharmacists and their employees as to the nature and the extent of their liability to the purchasing general public for any advice given in the course of dispensing medicines and drugs which are obtainable other than by prescription.

Mr. Newton: Pharmacists are subject to the same duty of care, responsibility and liability that any professional person accepts. The Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, the pharmacists' professional body, issues general guidance in the form of a code of ethics. It says for example that "a pharmacist has a general responsibility to provide information and advice and he should take reasonable precautions to see that it is both accurate and appropriate".

East Hertfordshire DHA (Resources)

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received relating to the level of resources being transferred from the North-West Thames regional health authority to the East Hertfordshire health authority consequent upon local hospital ward closures.

Mrs. Currie: We have received three representations about the level of resources transferred to East Hertfordshire health authority since 1 January 1987.

National Insurance Fund

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current amount in the national insurance fund; and if any of the funds are re-invested.

Mr. Major: In the "Report by the Government Actuary on the drafts of the Social Security Benefits Uprating (No. 2) Order 1986 and the Social Security (Contributions, Re-rating) (No. 2) Order 1986" (Cm. 24) it is estimated that the total balance of the national insurance fund at the end of the 1986-87 financial year will be £5,617,000,000.

The securities held by the National Investment and Loans Office on behalf of the fund are listed in the NI fund annual account (HC 103 published December 1986) and are almost entirely British Government Securities and loans to local authorities.

Invalid Care Allowance

Sir Richard Body asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will give the reasons for the delay in payment of the invalid care allowance awarded from 9 September 1985 to Mrs. Carol Cubberley of Horncastle Road, Boston, reference number 021327.

Mr. Major: Mrs. Cubberley claimed invalid care allowance on 8 September 1986. Payment from that date was made on 17 November, but arrears from 22 December 1984 to 7 September 1986 were not paid until 20 March 1987. I regret the delay, which arose from a departmental error. Steps have been taken to minimise the risk of a similar mistake happening again.

Lung Cancer

Mr. Blair asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the regulations to introduce the prescribed disease disablement benefit scheme for those contracting lung cancer as a result of exposure to zinc chromate, calcium chromate, and strontium chromate dust will be laid before Parliament.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Nuneaton (Mr. Stevens) on 4 March, at column 628.

Wistons Nursing Home, Brighton

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many visits were made by officials of his Department to Wistons nursing home, Dyke Road, Brighton in each of the years 1976 to 1986.

1980	2
1981	3
1982	2
1983	2
1984	1
1985	2
1986	2

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the cost of treating venous leg ulcers in 1986.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that it is not possible to estimate the total cost to the National Health Service of treating venous leg ulcers. These treatments are provided mainly by general practitioners and district nurses but data are not available on the proportion of their time spent on these problems nor are hospital costs identified for individual treatments.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each of the three categories of housing benefit in 1987-88 his estimates of the number of beneficiaries and the cost to the Exchequer together with a breakdown showing where possible for each category the number (a) receiving each type of benefit other than child benefit, (b) receiving only child benefit, (c) employed and receiving no other benefit and (d) unemployed and receiving no other benefit, together with the estimated cost of the housing benefit in each case.

Mr. Lyell: I shall let the hon. Member have the information that is available as soon as possible.

Abortion

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leicester, East of 18 March, Official Report, column 504, officials of his Department last visited the Leicester Nuffield clinic in order to monitor the implementation of the Abortion Act and the Infant Life (Preservation) Act.

Mr. Major: The information requested concerning claims at these two social security offices is as follows:

	Greenock	Port Glasgow
(a) Death Grant	1,462	367
(b) Maternity Grant	1,137	468

The maternity grant figures quoted are for the 1986 calendar year; the death grant figures are those for the period 18 December 1985 to 16 December 1986.

Calthorpe Nursing Home, Edgbaston

Dame Jill Knight asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action has been taken to monitor the implementation of the Infant Life (Preseveration) Act in relation to the Calthorpe nursing home in Edgbaston.

Mr. Newton: The operation of the Abortion Act, which which the Infant Life (Preservation) Act interacts, is monitored in the private sector, including the Calthorpe nursing home which is only approved to perform terminations up to 20 weeks' gestation, through a system of irregular, unannounced visits by the Department's medical, nursing and investigative officers, by scrutiny of the abortion notification forms which are required to be sent to the chief medical officer within seven days of an abortion being carried out, and by the investigation of specific complaints or allegations of abuse.

Public Health Laboratory Service (Merseyside)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money was allocated to the public health laboratory service on Merseyside during 1986-87; how much has been allocated for 1987-88; and if he will list the full range of its responsibilities.

Mr. Newton: Allocations for 1986-87 are £785,000 for the public health laboratory service Liverpool laboratory and £313,000 for the PHLS Chester laboratory. Firm decisions on 1987-88 allocations have yet to be taken.

The Liverpool laboratory provides:

i. the microbiology department for Fazakerly hospital;

ii. certain reference services for hospitals in all health districts on Merseyside;

iii. microbiology services for general practitioners in south Sefton, north Liverpool and parts of Knowsley;
iv. a service to all environmental health departments on Merseyside.

The Chester laboratory provides:

i. the microbiology department for the Countess of Chester hospital;
ii. microbiology services for hospitals in the Chester district, together with certain virology tests for Wirral, Halton, Wrexham and east Clywd;
iii. environmental microbiology services for Chester, Halton, Ellesmere Port, Neston, Warrington, Vale Royal, Crewe and east Clywd;
iv. microbiology services for general practitioners in Wirral, west and north Cheshire and parts of east Clywd.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many personnel are currently employed in the public health laboratory service on Merseyside; and what were the levels of establishment over the past five years.

Mr. Newton: The public health laboratory service Liverpool laboratory has 58 staff; its establishment has increased by one over the past five years. The PHLS laboratory at Chester, which provides some services to parts of Merseyside, has 26 PHLS staff together with six National Health Service staff; the size of its establishment has remained unchanged in the past five years.

AIDS

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many blood tests for AIDS have been undertaken in the last three months by the public health laboratory service on Merseyside; and how many were taken in the same period last year.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients are currently undergoing kidney dialysis treatment on Merseyside; how many patients are on the waiting list; and what is the longest period of time which has elapsed since any of the outstanding cases were referred for dialysis treatment.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in Putney received maternity allowance in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the form requested. But in the 12 months ending April 1986, the latest year for which figures are available, 835 claims to maternity allowance were made at the Department's office in Wandsworth which covers the constituency, although the boundaries are not conterminous.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in Welwyn and Hatfield received maternity allowance in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the form requested. But in the 12 months ending April 1986, the latest year for which figures are available, the following numbers of claims to maternity allowance were made at the Department's offices which cover the constituency, although the boundaries are not conterminous.

	Number
Hatfield	681
Hertford	1,067
St. Albans	1,056

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in Battersea received maternity allowance in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the form requested. But in the 12 months ending April 1986, the latest year for which figures are available, the following numbers of claims to maternity allowance were made at the Department's offices which cover the constituency although the boundaries are not conterminous:

Mr. Major: I have today sent to the local authority associations and to members of the SSAC for comment a draft of the proposed directions and guidance for social fund officers on the operation of the social fund from April 1988, and to national voluntary organisations and to professional bodies for information. I have placed a copy in the Library.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 13 March 1987, c. 331]: For the latest available district health authority information, I refer the hon. Member to the summary booklet of private hospitals statistics 1985, a copy of which is in the Library. Matching information for the earlier years is contained in tables which I have arranged to be placed in the Library today.

Medical Staff

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of consultant medical staff per unit in each regional health authority in England and Wales at the latest available date.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 23 March 1987, c. 77]: Information on the number of consultant medical staff in each region in England, and on the number of units of management, is given in the table. However the definition of a unit of management varies from district to district and the figures for different regions are therefore not directly comparable.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Countries which have withholding arrangements include the USA, Canada, France, Germany, Australia, New Zealand, Belgium, Switzerland, Portugal, Spain, Finland, Norway and Sweden.

Generally, tax is withheld on all payments subject to the effect of the relevant double taxation agreement. For example, the United Kingdom-United States of America convention exempts the visiting entertainer or sportsman from liability where the gross receipts do not exceed $15,000 (or their sterling equivalent) in the tax year concerned.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for those of working age the income distribution by tax category of those with an unearned income of more than £200 and £500 a year, respectively;

Taxation

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will update, to take account of the 1987 Budget, the information on tax changes contained in his reply of 28 April 1986 to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher), Official Report, columns 326-28;

(2) if he will update, to take account of the 1987 Budget, the information on tax changes contained in his reply of 21 October 1986 to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher), Official Report, columns 807-8.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Personal Incomes (Budget Effects)

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide for 1987 the same information provided in his reply of 27 October 1986 to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher), Official Report, columns 53-56.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Tax and National Insurance

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will update to 1987-88 the information on tax and national insurance contributions provided in his reply of 30 January to the hon. Member for Thurrock, Official Report, columns 413-16;

(2) if he will update to 1987-88 the information on tax and national insurance contributions as a proportion of gross earnings provided in his reply of 19 February to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher), Official Report, column 829; and if he will provide the same information for a married man with an earning wife;

(3) if he will update, to take account of the 1987 Budget, the information on tax and national insurance provided in his reply of 9 April 1986 to the hon. Member for Thurrock, columns 124-25.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Budget Statement

Mr. Hancock asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of printing and distributing the Budget statement at railway stations on 17 March; and what was the income from the sale of these pamphlets.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Gross Incomes

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the distribution of gross incomes in the coming financial year by range of income in steps of £1,000 to £20,000 and £5,000 to £50,000 divided between elderly and other taxpayers and between single persons and one-earner and two-earner households.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Unitary Tax

Mr. Harris asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement on unitary tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Government announced on 18 December 1986 that, while they do not intend to recommend the repeal of section 54 of the Finance Act 1985, they are prepared to defer initiating action under section 54 for the present in recognition of the progress that has been made towards resolving the unitary tax issue. In the meantime, progress towards a final resolution of the unitary tax issue will be kept under careful review. Should it be necessary to take action under section 54 before 31 December 1988 it will not apply to dividends paid before the date of the announcement of such action. If it is necessary to take action thereafter, it will not apply to dividends paid on or before 31 December 1988.

Written Answers to Questions

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid

Mr. Alexander asked the Attorney-General when the Government propose to respond to the recommendations contained in the legal aid scrutiny.

The Attorney-General: The Government have today published a White Paper (Cm.118) which sets out their proposals for the future of the legal aid schemes in England and Wales.

ENVIRONMENT

Pugneys Pleasure Area, Wakefield

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the date and venue for the public inquiry into the Pugneys Wakefield, pleasure area proposals had been specifically identified; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The inquiry is to take place in the council chamber in Wakefield town hall on Tuesday 12 May 1987. My right hon. Friend will announce his decision as soon as possible following receipt of the inspector's report.

Swans

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the number of swans that have died as a result of lead shot poisoning in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is estimated that 3,000-3,500 mute swans died each year from this cause in the period 1980-85. The estimate is derived by relating details of post-mortem examinations carried out at a number of centres to the known annual mortality rate of the population as a whole. It is too soon to assess the effects of the recent statutory ban on the sale of certain lead angling weights, but the Nature Conservancy Council will monitor the position.

Wellingborough Borough Council

Mr. Fry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department will inform Wellingborough borough council of the result of its application of 9 December 1986 for an additional allocation to the home insulation scheme for the 1986-87 financial year.

Mr. Tracey: The Department has informed the council that its application for additional resources under the homes inslation scheme has been successful.

Rating Authorities (Precepts)

Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the precepts levied on the rating authorities by the shire counties in England, as notified to his Department, in terms of amounts in the pound for domestic ratepayers and for commercial ratepayers for 1987-88.

Mr. Chope: Following is the available information:

Notes:

1. In addition to the county precept, ratepayers in the shires will pay a district rate and possibly a parish rate. These together comprise the general or commercial rate. The domestic rate is calculated by subtracting 18·5p from the general rate, not specifically from the county precept.
2. The Northumberland precept excludes the Northumbria Police Authority precept of 14·20p, as this is a joint metropolitan police authority shared with Tyne and Wear districts.

Rate Reform

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of all the notes on the impact of the Government's rate reform proposals provided to representatives of the provincial press on 23 March; and if he will list the representatives of the press who received them and the areas of England to which they relate.

Mr. Chope: On 23 March my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and I met representatives of the regional press, at their request, to discuss the Government's proposals for the reform of the rating system. Those concerned were given notes summarising the likely effect of the new system on the areas of interest to them. The journalists concerned, and the areas they cover, were as follows:

Gordon Jackson (Newcastle, Middlesbrough, Reading, north-east Lancashire);
Maurice Toseland (Wolverhampton);
Stan Sparks (Birmingham);
Ian Craig (Manchester);
Alan Goddard (Hull, Grimsby);
Jack Foster (Bradford, York, Brighton).
Chris Walker (Liverpool) was invited but was unable to do so.

On the same day copies of the relevant notes were sent to the hon. Members most concerned. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what research his Department has conducted to assess the differing environmental implications of internationally agreed policies to (a) freeze production of chlorofluorocarbons production by 25 per cent.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department is an active participant in the work of the co-ordinating committee for the ozone layer which is run by the United Nations environment programme. CCOL has been assessing various scenarious for potential ozone depletion by CFCs and other trace gases, and these are also under consideration by the Government's stratospheric ozone research group. A two-dimensional model for testing scenarios, which is being developed in Cambridge, will enable my Department to conduct its own independent assessments.

Ozone

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will explain what effect ozone found at low level as a photochemical pollutant is having on the ozone layer.

Mr. Waldegrave: Ozone generated near the ground (largely due to hydrocarbons and oxides of nitrogen) is not transported into the upper atmosphere, and has no effect on the ozone layer. Ozone is sometimes transferred to ground level from the stratosphere, however. A detailed discussion can be found in the recent report from the DOE photochemical oxidant review group, a copy of which I have placed in the Library of the House.

TRANSPORT

Helicopter Accidents

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many helicopter accidents have occurred onshore and offshore in each of the last 10 years; and if he will show in tabular form the date and place of each incident, the make of the helicopter concerned, the cause of the accident, and the numbers killed or injured respectively.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Civil Aviation Authority, which is statutorily responsible for aviation safety, has told me that since January 1976 there have been 259 accidents to United Kingdom registered helicopters reported to it. The precise information requested by the hon. Member could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

A1 (Brampton-Stamford)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) accidents and (b) fatalities there have been on the A1 between Brampton and Stamford for each of the past five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The record of accidents is as follows:

	Injury Accidents	Number of accidents involving fatality
1982	112	6
1984	117	8
1985	114	3

During this period, traffic on the road has increased by up to 39 per cent.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the extent and time scale of his proposals for (a) building flyovers and (b) upgrading the A1 to motorway standard between Brampton and Stamford;

(2) whether he has any proposals to reduce the number of (a) intersections or (b) crossover points on the A1 between Brampton and Stamford.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following a study completed in 1986, we have been considering the justification for flyovers and other improvements on A1 in Cambridgeshire. The results will be announced shortly when the current road programme review is complete. A flyover at the Brampton A604 junction is already included in the proposals for the M1-A1 link.

We are also examining small-scale proposals for reducing traffic movements across A1. These do not include complete closure of any side road junctions. There are no proposals for upgrading this section of A1 to motorway standard.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any proposals to install crash barriers on the A1 between Brampton and Stamford.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The A1 is being reviewed following the initiative announced in December for providing central safety fencing on the majority of dual carriageway trunk roads. As a first step, fences have been added to a contract for structural maintenance north of Carpenters lodge, near Stamford which started recently.

A programme will be drawn up for additional fencing where justified, and as resources allow. The work will need to be spread over a period of years.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many intersections on the A1 between Brampton and Stamford have no roundabout or lights.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are eight with grade separation and three at-grade roundabouts. The remainder comprise 31 simple at-grade junctions. Five out of the 42 have lighting. There are no traffic lights.

Channel Tunnel Bill

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from Glasgow district council requesting amendments to the Channel Tunnel Bill to ensure that through train services across and around London provide links between the tunnel and Glasgow.

Mr. Moore: None. I understand however that the district council has subemitted to the Select Committee of another place, which is at present considering the Channel Tunnel Bill, a petition which covers this point. The Government have already accepted at Report stage in this House the principle of an amendment to the Bill which would require British Rail to draw up plans for the dispersal of Channel tunnel rail services to destinations beyond London.

Learner Drivers

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leicester, East of 23 March on accidents involving learner drivers, he will ensure that details of a driver's length of experience are recorded on the accident report form.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. Obtaining this information would require examining driving licences for over 400,000 vehicles each year and place an unacceptable burden on the police.

Driving Tests

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leicester, East on 23 March on driving tests, he will make it his policy to procure information on the number of tests which those taking driving tests have previously failed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no plans at present to collect this information.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the most serious accident recorded during a driving test in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The records of accidents on tests cannot be interpreted in this way. They provide only brief details of the type of accident and whether the examiner was injured.

Pursuant to my reply, of 23 March, I apologise for an error in the figure I gave for the number of accidents on test in the year October 1983-September 1984. The figure ought to have been 973. That is 0·05 per cent., or about 1 in 1,850 tests conducted. My mistake was in using the Metropolitan traffic area figure.

Trading Standards Officers

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration is being given to increasing inspection powers of trading standards officers; whether this includes consideration of making spot checks on second-hand car dealers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's vehicle examiners have the necessary qualifications and powers to inspect second-hand cars. We will shortly be running four pilot projects involving spot checks on second-hand car dealers undertaken jointly by vehicle examiners and trading standards officers.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Video Recordings Act 1984

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought under the Video Recordings Act 1984; and with what results.

Mr. Mellor: The information available to me, which may be incomplete, indicates that there were no prosecutions under the Act in 1985. No figures of prosecutions are yet available for 1986.

TA Centre, Leyton

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the reasons for the presence of a large number of police vehicles and police officers in the vicinity of the Territorial Army centre, Lea Bridge Road, Leyton, in the evening of 21 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner that as part of his contingency plans officers were held in reserve at this place on 21 March for use if there had been an outbreak of public disorder.

Homicide

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons previously convicted for homicide were convicted for a second homicide offence in the period from 1965 to 1986; and what were the figures within that total for each five-year period.

Mr. Mellor: Information is published in table 4.9 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1985" (Cm. 10), and the corresponding tables in the volumes for earlier years, and is summarised in the following table.

Suspects convicted of homicide by previous homicide convictions
England and Wales Number of persons

[1] As at 24 March 1987

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if figures for the percentage increase in murders made known to the police (a) between 1945 and 1965 and (b) between 1965 and the most recent year are available separately from those listed under the heading "Offences initially recorded as homicide" in table 4.1 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales 1985."

Mr. Mellor: In the absence of a court decision it is not possible to distinguish between offences of murder, manslaughter and infanticide — they are known collectively as homicide. Since 1967, the numbers of homicides decided to be murder are published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", in table 4.2 of the volume for 1985 (Cm. 10) and in the corresponding table in the volumes for earlier years. For persons convicted of murder, an indication of the changes in the numbers since 1945 may be obtained from the results of court proceedings which are published in table S2.1*(a)* of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables, 1985" and in the corresponding tables for earlier years.

Post-school Educational Institutions

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 17 February, Official Report, column 559, how much money has been allocated under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 since January 1976 in each local authority to post-school educational institutions; and if he will give a breakdown as to the various purposes to which these funds have been allocated.

Mr. Waddington: Grant under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 is paid to local authorities on the cost of employment of staff to help meet the special needs of people of Commonwealth origin. Information about the cost of posts in post-school educational institutions for the years requested cannot be readily obtained from our records. The following table gives available information about such posts from the annual claim submitted by local authorities for the year 1986-87. The list does not include any posts which may have been approved subsequently or posts which have been approved but which the local authority has not yet filled.

Special Constables

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans for increasing the responsibilities of special constables: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The deployment of special constables in individual forces is a matter for chief constables, to whom we have commended the 1981 report of the second working party of the Police Advisory Board, which made suggestions for the wider and more effective use of the special constabulary. Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary look specifically at the use made of special constables when they inspect forces. There is much scope for the imaginative use of special constables, for example in crime prevention work.

Firearms

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the percentage increase in the numbers of crimes and offences involving the use of firearms in the 10-year period ended 1965; and what were the total of convictions in courts for firearms offences or crimes and offences involving the use of firearms in the years 1955, 1965, 1975, 1985, and 1986, respectively.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Genetic Fingerprinting

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has carried out any investigations or received any reports about the use of genetic fingerprinting as part of the forensic evidence to be adduced in (a) cases of alleged sexual assault and (b) other criminal cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The technique of genetic fingerprinting, pioneered by Dr. Alec Jeffreys of Leicester university, has been further developed by scientists at the Forensic Science Service Central Research Establishment, for application to criminal cases. It has great potential for identification of suspects in particular types of cases in which body fluids have been shed. Since December 1986 the technique has been used in a small number of criminal investigations of sexual assaults and murder. Statements in these cases have been issued to the police but have not yet been adduced as evidence in a Crown Court.

Television Licences

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance is given to television licence inspectors about how long should be given to someone without a television licence to obtain a licence.

Mr. Mellor: Television licence inquiry officers have written instructions to report each case in which there are grounds to suspect that a person is using television without a licence, and never to imply or indicate that prosecution may not take place if he offers to pay immediately for a licence or to obtain one within a short time. Inquiry officers have no discretion to allow time for the purchase or renewal of a licence; and decisions as to prosecution are taken in the light of their reports and other relevant circumstances.

Mr. Aurang Zeb

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report the evidence of his principal officer to the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration in the course of his investigation into the circumstances in which Mr. Aurang Zeb was removed from the United Kingdom to Pakistan on 3 April 1986.

Mr. Waddington [pursuant to his reply, 2 March 1987, c. 472]: No: my right hon. Friend does not propose to depart from usual practice in this respect. To do so would be inconsistent with the privacy and confidentiality under which the Parliamentary Commissioner's investigations are conducted.

Advanced Further Education

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to receive the report of the National Advisory Body for Higher and Further Education on good management practice; what other advice he will be taking before producing his plans for the future of polytechnics and colleges providing advanced further education courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: I am unable to say when my right hon. Friend will receive the final report on good management practice, the timing of which is a matter for the committee of the National Advisory Body. A number of other reports have recently received publicity and bear on the constitution of polytechnics and colleges and related matters. The Government welcome the debate which has developed and have been listening to advice from all quarters.

Assisted Places

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the average full cost per pupil for all schools offering assisted places for each local education authority in England.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Member to the answers which my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Durham, North (Mr. Radice) on 22 January, at column 640, and on 2 February at column 474.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will present in a table (a) the average net cost per pupil in 1983-84, cash, per secondary pupil at maintained secondary schools in each local authority in England and (b) the average expenditure in the same year per assisted place pupil to each local education authority in England.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is given in the following table:

Research Grants

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the implications of the decision of the Science and Engineering Research Council to defer all applications for new research grants until September for scientific research in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend has had talks with the chairman of the Science and Engineering Research Council about the council's decision to defer new applications for research grants until September. The council has taken this step in order to absorb the cost to it in 1987-88 of the recently agreed pay settlement for university academic staff. It is for the research councils to decide how best to manage their priorities, but we are discussing with them the implications of this particular settlement.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to increase the number of places available for the training of speech therapists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Science Budget

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer of 18 February, Official Report, columns 660-1, to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas), if he will indicate the proportion of the total amount allocated from his Department's science budget to universities in each year since 1979 which is represented by the amount allocated to the constituent colleges of the University of Wales.

Mr. Walden [pursuant to his reply, 26 February 1987, c. 352]: The information requested is as follows:

PRIME MINISTER

Ministerial Responsibility

Q38. Mr. Freud asked the Prime Minister whether she intends to allocate any additional ministerial responsibility to the Minister of State, Privy Council Office and Minister for the Arts; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have no present plans to do so.

State Security

Q93. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she will now refer to the Security Commission allegations of security services operations against Ministers of the Crown in the 1970s; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No.

Greater London

Mr. Squire asked the Prime Minister what arrangements exist in the Prime Minister's office for analysis and assessment of the provision of public services in the Greater London area following the reorganisation of London government in 1986.

The Prime Minister: Abolition of the Greater London council resulted in a transfer of its services to the London boroughs and to a number of other successor authorities. Departments make their own arrangements for the analysis and assessment of public services in London, where they are responsible for so doing.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 26 March.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 26 March.

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 26 March.

Mr. Duffy asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 26 March.

Mr. Janner asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 26 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I shall attend a state banquet given by King Fahd.

EC (Expenditure)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the implications for the Community of the decision of the Council of Finance Ministers on 9 March to agree to expenditure which the Court of Auditors had declared to be unlawful; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

Interception of Communications (Commission Report)

Sir Edward Gardner asked the Prime Minister when the Commission appointed under the Interception of Communications Act 1985 will present its annual report; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: A Copy of the 1986 annual report by Lord Justice Lloyd has been laid before this House today in accordance with section 8(7) of the Interception of Communications Act 1985. The confidential appendix to the report has been excluded from that copy in accordance with section 8(8) of the Act. I am grateful to the Commissioner for the thoroughness of his report and the reassurance it contains. Lord Justice Lloyd comments on the high value of the intelligence obtained from interception, and the care taken by all concerned to oberve not only the letter but also the spirit of the Act. The Commissioner's report suggests a small number of improvements to the procedures observed in dealing with these cases. These recommendations have been accepted and the improvements suggested are being implemented.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 11 March, Official Report, column 185, if he will list United Kingdom aid used in mixed credits and less concessional tied aid loans as a percentage of gross bilateral aid commitment, for each year since the aid and trade provision was introduced.

Mr. Chris Patten: The first commitments under the aid and trade provision were made in 1978. The information requested is set out in the table

	Per cent.
1978	[1]2
1979	[1]6
1980	8
1981	12
1982	36
1983	9
1984	21

[1] Full data in these years are not available. The figures represent aid used in mixed credit commitments only, and are approximate.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the impact of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development agreement on aid and export credits on United Kingdom aid and trade provisions.

Mr. Chris Patten: The impact of the new agreement will be that the minimum grant element for tied aid credits (including mixed credits) supported by the aid and trade provision is due to be increased to 30 per cent. from 1 July 1987 and to 35 per cent. from 1 July 1988. For the least developed countries, the minimum grant element will be 50 per cent. from 1 July 1987. I am glad to say that the grant element will be calculated in a way which more nearly reflects the cost to individual donor countries of providing such finance, which will make it more expensive for countries with low interest rate currencies.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will indicate the percentage breakdown of the £30 million provided for development projects in the Falkland Islands, including the proportion spent on (a) the buying of farmland for redistribution, (b) research, (c) evaluation of development projects and (d) administrative expenses, including visits by officials and experts.

Mr. Chris Patten: The breakdown of the £31 million development aid grant is as follows:

	Allocation per cent.	Estimated expenditure to date per cent.
Falkland Islands Development Corporation[1]	27	15
Power and water supply projects	25	14
Technical Co-operation	16	16
Land/farm transfer	8	7
Road and track construction projects	6	4
School hostel	4	4
Agricultural Research Centre	3	3
Miscellaneous small projects and balance awaiting firm commitment	11	[2]37
	100	100

[1] Including research and development activities.
[2] Unspent.

The technical co-operation allocation provides for the cost of manpower assistance, including the cost of those involved in the evaluation of projects. Departmental administrative expenses are not funded from the grant.

WALES

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales what financial aid is given by the Welsh Development Agency to Irish shipping lines and why; and what financial aid is given to Sealink.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The Welsh Development Agency has not given financial assistance to an Irish shipping line or to Sealink, although the agency is involved in measures designed to assist the development of the port facilities at Holyhead for the benefit of all users, including shipping interests.

Gwynedd Health Authority

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what applications for additional funds his Department has received from Gwynedd health authority to meet the unexpected additional cost burdens placed upon it in providing a new flagpost, flags, flowers, carpets and associated expenditure relating to the official opening of Ysbyty Gwynedd.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: None.

Welsh Health Promotion Authority

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he is now in a position to announce the membership of the Welsh Health Promotion Authority.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I announced on 26 February that Dr. Simon Smail had accepted an invitation to become chairman of the new authority. I can now announce that the following have accepted an invitation to become members.

Miss Carol Charlesworth
Mr. Alan Crabbe
Mr. Gerald Davies
Dr. John Evans
Dr. Denis Francis
Mr. Hywel Griffiths
Professor Ray Hodgson
Councellor Thomas Jones
Dr. Beverley Littlepage
Miss Elizabeth Muir
Mr. Seth Roberts
Miss Eileen Rossiter
Miss Sandra Sandham
Mr. James Thomas

A copy of the press release giving details has been placed in the Library of the House.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Accommodation

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Lord Privy Seal how many right hon. and hon. Gentlemen officially occupy offices in Upper Committee Corridor North in the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Biffen: Forty-one right hon. and hon. Gentlemen occupy offices in Upper Committee Corridor, North.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Lord Privy Seal how many right hon. and hon. Ladies officially occupy offices in Upper Committee Corridor North in the palace of Westminster.

Mr. Biffen: None.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Lord Privy Seal (1) how many male research assistants or secretaries wholly operate from rooms in Upper Committee Corridor North which have been allocated for the use of right hon. and hon. Members;

(2) how many female research assistants or secretaries wholly operate from rooms in Upper Committee Corridor North which have been allocated for the use of right hon. and hon. Members.

Mr. Biffen: No information is available to indicate how many secretaries and research assistants wholly operate from hon. Members' offices. Two male and three female secretaries or research assistants operate from rooms allocated for this purpose on the Upper Committee Corridor North.

ENERGY

Nuclear Fusion

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Energy, following the announcement of the International Atomic Energy Authority concerning a joint research programme towards constructing the world's first nuclear fusion reactor with the active co-operation of the United States of America, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Japan and the 12 European Economic Community countries, what contribution Her Majesty's Government are providing for this project.

Mr. Goodlad: A group of experts has been set up to discuss further the possibility of collaboration. The United Kingdom will contribute to the discussions as a member of Euratom.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make the gathering of information on ethnic origins compulsory, and publish the percentage of entrants to his Department who failed to respond to the ethnic origins questionnaire.

Mr. Peter Walker: Surveys of the ethnic origins of staff in post and new entrants to my Department are being carried out on the basis of voluntary self-classification. This is in accordance with arrangements agreed between the Management and Personnel Office and the Council of Civil Service Unions.

Of the new entrants to my Department during the period 1 October 1985 to 1 February 1987, 14 per cent. failed to respond to the ethnic origins questionnaire.

Results of the surveys carried out in my Department will be included in the reports to be published by the Management and Personnel Office. I have no plans to publish figures for my Department separately.

Electricity Supply

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received seeking privatisation of the electricity supply industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I have received a number of representations on this matter. The Government have no present plans to privatise the electricity supply industry.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Training Scheme

Mr. Clay asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to designate the job training scheme as approved training for the purposes of section 20 of the Social Security Act 1975.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General what percentage of the total work force in the north-west region are now employed in manufacturing industries; and what was the comparative 1979 figure.

Mr. Lee: Estimates of the labour force in manufacturing industries in regions are not available, as the self-employed statistics are not analysed in this way.

In September 1986, the latest date for which figures are available, 21 per cent. of the total civilian working population, which is the sum of employees in employment, the self employed and the unemployed, in the north-west region were employees in employment in manufacturing industries. The comparable figure for September 1979 was 31 per cent.

Some of the decrease in the number of employees in employment in manufacturing will be the result of the reclassification of jobs such as industrial cleaning, catering, computer services and road haulage, previously done by manufacturer's own employees and now done by subcontractors. This developing feature of our economy has the effect of exaggerating the extent of the move from manufacturing to service sector employment.

Greater London (Services)

Mr. Squire asked the Paymaster General what arrangements exist within his Department, within the central headquarters or in any regional or sub-regional organisation, for dealing with his responsibilities regarding public services or any other function in respect of the Greater London area; and how many full-time equivalent staff are involved in such work.

Mr. Lee: Greater London is one of 10 regions in the regional directorate structure of the Manpower Services Commission. There is a regional director for employment and enterprise and one for vocational education and training. Some 2,200 staff are employed in delivering services to Greater London. It is also one of nine regions for the Advisory Conciliation and Arbitration Service with approximately 100 staff and its own regional director. In the unemployment benefit service, since 1984 Greater London has been served by two of its nine regions—southern region extending south of the Thames and eastern region extending north of the Thames. Some 4,400 of the staff of these two regional benefit managers are involved in providing services in Greater London.

Some field staff of the Health and Safety Executive, principally in the Factory Inspectorate, are based in the area offices in north and south London. Other services provided by my Department (and by the Health and Safety Executive) for Greater London are managed centrally, although there are local or sub-regional offices in London for redundancy payments, the Wages Inspectorate, Employment Agency, licensing, had the Careers Service Inspectorate. Any further breakdown of staffing numbers would involve national attributions and would not be on the same basis as the figures quoted above.

Mr. Squire asked the Paymaster General with which Departments and non-departmental bodies his Department and its related non-departmental public bodies has consulted during 1986-87 in respect of services provided within Greater London; approximately how often such consultations have taken place; and what issues were discussed.

Mr. Lee: The Department of Employment, the Manpower Services Commission and the Health and Safety Executive are continuously in touch with a range of other Government Departments and non-departmental bodies regarding services within Greater London as in the rest of Great Britain. A wide range of issues is discussed.

Mr. Squire asked the Paymaster General whether there are any proposals to change the arrangements for discharging his Department's responsibilities regarding public services or any other function in respect of the Greater London area during the forthcoming year.

Mr. Lee: There are no such proposals.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme (Disabled Persons)

Mr. Wareing asked the Paymaster General what representations he has received about discrimination against self-employed disabled people who apply for assistance under the enterprise allowance scheme; if he has any plans to alter the scheme to facilitate their use of it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I have received no general representations about discrimination against self-employed disabled people who apply for the enterprise allowance scheme, although individuals have written concerning their particular problems. Disabled people who fulfil the eligibility conditions for this scheme are treated in the same way as any other unemployed people. Disabled people wishing to become self-employed can also benefit from the range of Manpower Services Commission schemes designed to help overcome their specific work-related problems.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General whether he will provide in the Official Report a table showing the percentage change in employment in the chemical, transport equipment, textile, mechanical engineering and metal-working industries between, respectively, 1974 and 1979 and 1974 and the latest available quarter, in the case of the United Kingdom and showing such information as he has for Germany, France, Italy, the United States of America and Japan.

Mr. Lee: Estimates of the total numbers employed in the United Kingdom in the industries specified are not available as the self-employed statistics are not analysed in the degree of detail required. The available information for the United Kingdom is as follows:

Employees in employment: United Kingdom

	Net changes between June 1974 and June 1979	Net changes between June 1974 and September 1986[1]
	Per cent.	Per cent.
Chemical industry (25)[2]	1	−17
Manufacture of other transport equipment (36)	−7	−30
Textile industry (43)	−20	−48
Mechanical engineering (32)	−3	−33
Manufacture of metal goods not elsewhere specified (31)	−10	−47

[1] The latest date for which United Kingdom estimates are available.

[2] The figures in parenthesis indicate the class of the 1980 Standard Industrial Classification.

Comparative information is readily available only from 1980, for the member of the European Community, and for slightly different industry groupings.

The following table shows the percentage changes up to the latest available quarter.

Percentage changes in employment between 1980 and the 1st quarter of 1986

	United Kingdom	Germany	France	Italy

n.a. Not available.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General (1) if he will list the number of employees in 1981 and in 1984, and any estimate he has for 1986, and the numbers employed in (a) manufacturing, (b) construction, (c) metal manufacturing, and (d) engineering and allied industries in each parliamentary constituency in the United Kingdom.

(2) if he will list the net jobs loss for (a) all employees, (b) employees in manufacturing and construction (c) employees in manufacturing, (d) employees in engineering and allied industries and (e) employees in metal manufacturing, and the percentage fall, from June 1979 to the latest date for which figures are available for (i) Greater London, (ii) Birmingham, (iii) Liverpool, (iv) Manchester, (v) Newcastle, (vi) Glasgow, (vii) Cardiff, (viii) Bristol, (ix) Coventry, (x) Leicester, (xi) Bradford, (xii) Edinburgh, (xiii) Dundee and (xiv) Swansea.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Benefits

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General (1) if he will publish the preliminary results of his study into the reallocation of responsibility for benefits for the unemployed;

(2) if he is investigating the feasibility of imposing any new work test or conditions for the payment of unemployment benefit;

(3) if he is considering proposals or investigating the feasibility of depriving unemployed 16 and 17-year-olds of the right to claim supplementary benefit.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Workfare

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if any Manpower Services Commission officials are studying the United States experience of workfare; and if any have paid visits to the United States.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Departmental Section UB 9

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will publish the responsibilities of his Department's section UB 9.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make the gathering of information on ethnic origins compulsory, and publish the percentage of entrants to his Department who failed to respond to the ethnic origins questionnaire.

Mr. Butcher: There are no plans at present to change from the voluntary self-classification system of gathering ethnic origin information about Civil Service staff. I would refer the hon. Lady to the reply my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave her today on this point. Of 1,739 new entrants to the Department since October 1985, 850 (49 per cent.) have not yet responded to the questionnaire.

Companies (Research and Development)

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to introduce legislation to amend the Companies Act 1985 to oblige limited companies to publish their yearly expenditure on research and development in their annual results; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I support disclosure in company accounts of expenditure on research and development as likely to increase awareness of its importance to the economy. However, I have no present plans for legislation on the matter as the Accounting Standards Committee is currently undertaking work on producing a statement of standard accounting practice which would require disclosure of such expenditure in company accounts.

Nationalisation Compensation

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the compensation paid by Her Majesty's Government to stockholders of (a) Messrs. Kincaid, (b) Vosper and (c) Brooke Marine; what information he has as to what was shown under the item "cash" in each of those company's accounts at the time of nationalisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The companies' balance sheets at the vesting date, 1 July 1977, showed the following:

John G. Kincaid and Co.
Bank balances and cash on hand	3,305,787
Brooke Marine Ltd.
Bank and cash	2,192,000
A special balance sheet for the nationalised business of Vosper Ltd. showed:
Bank balances and cash	5,466,000

The compensation paid to stockholders, which in accordance with the Aircraft and Shipbuilding Industries Act 1977 was negotiated by reference to the value of the shares during a period of six months ending on 28 February 1974, was as follows:

John G. Kincaid and Co.	3,927,000
Vosper Companies	5,300,000
Brooke Marine Ltd.	1,800,000

My right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Industry on 7 August 1980 announced that the Government had reluctantly come to the conclusion that there was no satisfactory way to alter the 1977 compensation terms.

Fireworks

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will introduce legislation to prohibit unlicensed traders from selling fireworks and to ensure that unlicensed retailers are not supplied with fireworks by wholesalers;

(2) if he has any plans to improve the level of enforcement of the Fireworks Safety Regulations 1986 (a) relating to the release of information about holders of explosives licences from the fire authority and (b) in detecting unlicensed traders during the period when fireworks are sold to the public.

Mr. Howard: I shall reply to the hon. Lady as soon as possible.

Secondhand Car Dealers

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received calling for trading standards officers to be able to prosecute secondhand car dealers for trading standards offences without first receiving a complaint; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I have received no representations calling for trading standards officers to have powers to prosecute secondhand car dealers under general trading standards legislation without first receiving a complaint. Such legislation, for example the Trade Descriptions Act 1968, generally empowers trading standards officers to investigate possible offences on their own initiative.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what research is currently being carried out to look for alternatives to chlorofluorocarbons.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Considerable research has been undertaken in the United Kingdom and elsewhere into alternatives to chlorofluorocarbons. This research continues, but it is not a simple or quick process to develop suitable replacement chemicals and then manufacture them in commercial quantities to consumer satisfaction.

DEFENCE

Leyland Trucks

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations were carried out with his Department prior to the decision to merge Leyland Trucks with DAF.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department was consulted appropriately on its military truck interests prior to the merger announcement.

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's heavy truck procurement policy following the decision to close the Scammell works at Watford after the merger of Leyland Trucks with DAF.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The closure of the Scammell works at Watford is not expected to affect the Department's procurement policy for heavy trucks or other vehicles. Suitable arrangements are in hand to ensure the orderly redisposition of all existing Defence vehicle contracts held by Scammell within the restructured Leyland organisation.

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements are being made to ensure the supply of parts and maintenance for trucks purchased by his Department from Leyland vehicles following the merger with DAF.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The merger of Leyland and DAF is not expected to affect the continued availability and supply of parts for service vehicles purchased previously from Leyland or its subsidiaries.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Shore asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the range of the SS21, SS22 and SS23 missiles; and about how many are deployed in East Germany and Czechoslovakia, respectively.

Mr. Stanley: Detailed assessments of the ranges and deployments are classified. I am able to provide the following approximate figures:

Warsaw Pact SS21, SS12/22, SS23 deployments in East Germany and Czechoslovakia

Type	Maximum range km	Number of missile launchers
SS-21 (Scarab)	90	100
SS-12 Mod 2 (Scaleboard B)	900	50
SS-23 (Spider)	500	0

Notes:

(a) All the above missiles are land mobile and can be moved relatively speedily between the Western military districts of the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe.

(b) The missile launchers for each of these missiles can fire reload missiles, the number of which in each category is classified.

(c) Scaleboard B is an improved accuracy missile for the SS-12 system, and was formerly referred to as the "SS-22".

(d) In addition to the SS21, SS12/22, and SS23 missiles referred to in the table the Warsaw Pact has substantial numbers of the older Frog and Scud mobile ballistic missiles deployed in eastern Europe.

SCOTLAND

Community Charge

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate how the current product of domestic rates in Scotland and in Fife might be raised through community charge or a local income tax, with and without equalisation, in the cases of (a) a single person on an average manual worker's wage and (b) a married man on an average manual worker's wage, whose wife's earnings are the average for women in full-time employment.

Mr. Ancram: The estimated average local tax bills under the community charge system and under a local income tax system with and without resource equalisation needed to replace domestic rates in 1985-86, are given in the following table for the specific cases requested.

	Scotland		Fife
	Community charge	Local income tax	Community charge	Local income tax
				With resource equalisation	Without resource equalisation
	£	£	£	£	£
Case (a)
A single person on Scottish average earnings for a full-time male adult manual worker	207	361	210	367	272
Case (b)
A married man with earnings as in case (a), whose wife's earnings are the Scottish average for adult women in full-time work	414	517	420	516	390

Notes:

1. The underlying local income tax rates (with resource equalisation) have been estimated on the assumption that some form of resource equalisation would make the yield of 1p in the £ the same per adult in all areas.
2. In applying local income tax rates to cases (a) and (b) it is assumed that earnings are the only sources of income and that only personal tax allowances apply.
3. Published information on taxable resources in local authority areas is only available up to 1982-83. The sample size is small and the regional pattern shows considerable variation from year to year. Estimates of local income tax rates without resource equalisation are therefore subject to some uncertainty. Those in the table have been produced by applying the pattern of unequalised tax rates calculated for 1982-83 to 1985-86 average earnings.

Locate in Scotland (Director)

Mr. Williams asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on what terms Professor Neil Hood has been appointed as Director of Locate in Scotland; and on what criteria he was selected for the post.

Mr. Rifkind: Professor Hood has been appointed as Director, Locate in Scotland, on secondment from Strathclyde university, initially for a period of two years. He has been certificated as a civil servant and his salary of £35,000 per year includes a contribution from the Scottish Development Agency in respect of his wider role as a director of that body.

Professor Hood was selected from among a number of candidates on the usual criteria of ability, experience and knowledge in relation to the specific post under consideration.

Outer City Estates

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will outline the effects of current Government policies on the residents of outer city estates in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: The Government's policy is to encourage the breaking down of the large single-tenure peripheral housing estates into smaller communities where the residents have a real tenure choice. In a number of areas significant progress is being achieved through, for exmple, joint ventures involving housing associations, building societies and private sector developers, through low cost home ownership initiatives, and through greater tenant involvement, including the development of management and ownership co-operatives. These polices are having a considerable effect in regenerating estates such as Whitfield, Dundee, and in improving the quality of life for the residents in these areas.

Prison Disturbances

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received representations from Jimmy Boyle of the Gateway Exchange, Edinburgh, about an inquiry into the Scottish prison disturbances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Boyle wrote to my right hon. and learned Friend on 23 February about a questionnaire which Gateway Exchange had sent to certain prisoners in Scottish penal establishments. This questionnaire was said to be part of an inquiry which Gateway Exchange proposed to conduct on conditions in Scottish prisons.

My Department had not been notified or asked about the questionnaire before it was sent to individual prisoners. I do not regard Gateway Exchange as having any special locus, nor have I any expectation that such an inquiry would be pertinent.

Community Programme (Lothian and the Borders)

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received representations from Edinburgh and district trades council about the number of places available on the community programme in Lothian and the Borders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: No representations have been received by my Department from the Edinburgh and district trades council concerning the number of Community Programme places which are available in Lothian and the Borders.

The community programme continues to be successful in meeting its principal objective of providing a year's work experience for as many long-term unemployed people as possible within the available resources, thereby increasing their chances of finding a permanent job.

Abortions

Mr. Campbell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a breakdown by health boards of private clinics licensed for abortion operations; and if he will state, in each case, the owner of the clinic and its registered company address.

Mr. John MacKay: The names and addresses of the places approved by my right hon and learned Friend for the purposes of section 1 of the Abortion Act 1967 are as follows. Information on ownership is provided to my right hon. and learned Friend by applicants for approval but this information is not intended for publication. The hon. Member should approach the approved places direct for this information.

Health Board	Name of approved place	Address of approved place
Dumfries and Galloway	Moat Brae Nursing Home	George Street, Dumfries
Forth Valley	Stirling and District Nursing Home	18 Park Terrace, Stirling
Grampian	The St. John Nursing Home	21 Albyn Place, Aberdeen

Greater Glasgow	Ross Hall Hospital	221 Crookston Road, Glasgow
Lothian	Murrayfield Hospital	122 Corstorphine Road, Edinburgh

Jordanhill College of Education

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he or his officials have had with Glasgow district council (a) before or (b) since the publication of his consultative document on the governing bodies of colleges of education in respect of the retention of the town and gown link between the district council and Jordanhill college of education board of governors.

Mr. John MacKay: There have been no such discussions although written representations have been received from the district council. The Colleges of Education (Scotland) Regulations which come into effect on 1 April provide for the local authority governors of all colleges of education to be drawn from the membership of the education committees of regional or islands councils.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the hospital waiting list figures for (a) Fife and (b) Scotland for the latest date for which figures are available, and for each year since May 1979.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested, which relates to 30 September, follows:

	Fife	Scotland
1979	4,617	71,247
1980	4,245	67,387
1981	3,974	65,228

The increases in 1982 and 1983 reflect the effect of industrial action.

Redundancies

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many redundancies have been reported to him in each month of 1986 and 1987 for which figures are now available.

Mr. Lang: There are no comprehensive statistics on redundancies. The table shows information on the number of redundancies involving 10 or more workers confirmed to the Manpower Services Commission as occurring in Scotland in each month during the period from January 1986 to February 1987.

Year/Month	Confirmed Redundancies
1986 January	1,910
February	2,263

October	2,574
November	1,352
December	2,004
1987 January	1,396
February	881

All figures given may be subject to amendment. Figures for January and February of this year are as at March 1 1987, and final figures are expected to be higher than those given.

Community Programme

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the figures for community programme places in Scotland in 1986-87, and both provisional and new figures for 1987-88 for Fife and Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The average number of filled places on the community programme in Fife and Scotland during 1986-87, and the corresponding provisional figures for 1987-88, are shown in the table below.

Community Programme—Average Filled Places

Area	1986-87	1987-88

Labour Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish (a) by postal area and (b) local government electoral district for Dunfermline and Kirkcaldy districts the numbers unemployed, both men and women, on March 1987, or the most recent date for which figures are available, and the corresponding figures for March 1986, June 1983 and May 1979.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the precise form requested.

The following tables show the number of male and female unemployed claimants in each electoral ward in the Dunfermline and Kirkcaldy local authority districts for June 1983 (the earliest date for which such information can be provided), March 1986 and February 1987 (the latest date available).

Home Helps

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the latest figure for the number of home helps per 1,000 old people for each regional council area.

Mr. John MacKay: Provisional information as requested is as follows:

Region/Islands Council Area	Number of Home Helps[1]
Borders	5·4
Central	12·5
Dumfries and Galloway	9·7
Fife	15·4
Grampian	10·2
Highland	8·5
Lothian	13·9
Strathclyde	15·3
Tayside	9·4
Orkney	20·1
Shetland	14·7
Western Isles	30·3

[1] Whole-time equivalent as at 31 March 1986 per 1,000 population aged 65 or over.

Devolution

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether any conversations have taken place with the interested parties at the invitation of the Government on the matter of Scottish devolution since June 1983.

Mr. Rifkind: No.

Forestry (Plantings)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Forestry Commission will consult formally with the Nature Conservancy Council over its proposed plantings at Dyke/Strath Halladale and Tarsuach Hill before any further plantings take place.

Mr. John MacKay: Yes.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the proportion of coniferous and of broadleaved trees proposed to be planted in each of the forestry grant schemes approved in Sutherland and Caithness in each year from 1981 to date.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. As the hon. Member will appreciate, conditions in this part of Scotland are generally unsuitable for growing broadleaved woodland. Under the Government's broadleaves policy, introduced in 1985, however, the Forestry Commission seeks to achieve a broadleaf element of at least 5 per cent. under the Forestry Grant Scheme and to encourage pure broadleaved planting under the broadleaved woodland grant scheme, subject to site conditions being appropriate.

Forestry Commission (Land Holdings)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names and areas of land held by the Forestry Commission in the districts of Sutherland and Caithness which are considered unplantable.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost, since there are many areas, large and small, of unplantable land scattered throughout the Commission's forests in these districts.

Senile Dementia

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will investigate the reason why persons suffering from senile dementia in the Banff and Buchan constituency are being placed in a mental hospital instead of a normal hospital ward; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Decisions about the hospitals in which patients from Banff and Buchan are treated involve issues of clinical judgment and it would not be appropriate for my right hon. and learned Friend to investigate such matters.

Cottage Hospital, Peterhead

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to build a new cottage hospital in Peterhead; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Grampian health board has included proposals to upgrade or replace the Peterhead cottage hospital in its capital plan. These works are provisionally scheduled to commence in 1991, as the board is meantime concentrating on increasing the provision of long-stay accommodation in line with national priorities.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will investigate the situation at Peterhead cottage hospital where there is no weekday evening or Saturday and Sunday cover for casualty cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: I understand that Grampian health board ensures that a general practitioner is on call at all times to provide 24-hour, 7-day-a-week cover for emergency casualty cases.

Food Aid

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that those areas, such as the Banff and Buchan constituency, which did not receive adequate supplies of EEC butter, milk and cheese for distribution to the elderly and the unemployed will not be penalised by the fact that the scheme is due to end on 31 March; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will investigate as a matter of urgency the reason why there was a shortage of supplies for the EEC issue of butter, milk and cheese in the Banff and Buchan constituency; what arrangements will be made to meet the deficiency and issue supplies to the elderly and the unemployed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The assessment of needs in particular areas has been a matter for the charities involved, who have been responsible for ordering and distributing such quantities of foodstuffs as they have felt able to handle. They are to be warmly congratulated for the efforts they have made, and I have no plans to institute any alternative arrangements, or to seek an extension of the scheme beyond 31 March.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he anticipates that the voluntary organisations will be reimbursed their distribution costs from the EEC arising out of the issue of butter, milk and cheese to the elderly and the unemployed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Certain costs for the packaging of foodstuffs and their delivery to the charities are, within limits, reimbursable. Provided all the necessary documentation is sent to the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce, payment is being made as quickly as is practicable, and generally within a week.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Radioactivity (Cumbria)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply of 12 March, Official Report, column 304, when his Department first initiated tests in Cumbria for a range of radionuclides, including caesium, in the potential human food chain, and other environmental materials.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Such tests were initiated by my Department in the early 1950s.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply of 12 March, Official Report, column 304, whether he will state the number of tests his Department carried out for radionuclide levels in Cumbria between May 1985 and May 1986.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In Cumbria, during the period 1 May 1985 to 30 April 1986, my Department carried out over 700 tests for radionuclide levels in the agricultural and terrestrial environment and over 1,000 tests for levels in the aquatic environment.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply of 12 March, Official Report, column 304, whether he will list the range of foods and other environmental materials which were being tested for radionuclide levels in Cumbria prior to Chernobyl.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The range of foods and other environmental materials being tested prior to the Chernobyl accident included milk, fruit, vegetables, eggs, honey, cereals, cattle, sheep, rabbits, grass, rootmat, soil, fish, shellfish, seaweed, beach and harbour sediment, fishing gear, seawater and air.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Venous Leg Ulcers

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he has issued guidance to (a) district health authorities or (b) family practitioner committees on policy towards arrangements for the treatment of venous leg ulcers;

(2) what is his policy towards the provision of services for the treatment of leg ulcers in the light of the "Survey on Leg Ulcers" published by the Journal of District Nursing, a copy of which has been forwarded to him.

Mrs. Currie: Provision of services and arrangements for medical treatment, including that for leg ulcers, are matters for local decision by district health authorities in consultation with the practitioners concerned. Central guidance is not considered to be appropriate.

Health education about symptoms and prevention as proposed by the Journal of District Nursing will, from 1 April 1987, be a matter for the Health Education Authority which will wish to consider its policies and priorities in the field of health education.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what routine indications he receives from district and regional health authorities concerning the length and time scale of waiting lists for out-patients' treatment.

Mr. Newton: I regret that out-patient waiting list information is not held centrally.

Benefits

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the savings in benefits in the next financial year of raising the single and married allowances for both income tax and national insurance contributions to £2,500 and £5,000, respectively; if he will provide an estimate of the number of adults and children taken out of benefit under the various headings; and how many would remain in receipt of benefit as a result of also raising child benefit to £15 and making it taxable.

Mr. Major: There would be a negligible effect on benefit expenditure and eligibility to benefit in 1987-88 as a result of changes in tax allowances, or changes in national insurance contributions in that year (there is, in any event, no single or married allowance for such contributions). It would be disproportionately costly to estimate the effect of raising child benefit to £15 and making it taxable.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average amount received per household in supplementary benefit in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Greenock and Port Glasgow.

Mr. Lyell: In February 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the average weekly amount of supplementary benefit per claimant in Scotland was £26·79. Some households contain more than one claimant. No information is available about average amounts of supplementary benefit in Strathclyde or Greenock and Port Glasgow or about average amounts per household in Scotland.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many prosecutions have taken place for fraudulent claims for supplementary benefit in each year since 1979; and if he will list the numbers, and total costs of fraud investigation, including special investigation, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lyell: The numbers of prosecutions undertaken by the Department for fraudulent claims for supplementary benefit are as follows:

	Number
1979-80	14,588
1980-81	15,837
1981-82	12,260
1982-83	10,693
1983-84	5,753
1985-86	6,537

Information relating to the total numbers of fraud investigations is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. It may be helpful, however, to indicate the numbers of cases in which fraud was established. Results are available from 1980 and are shown in the table together with the estimated staff costs for each year.

	Number	£ million
1980-81	78,558	29·6
1981-82	73,141	34·0
1982-83	92,061	33·9
1983-84	95,690	36·7
1984-85	83,047	39·0
1985-86	92,839	42·0

Mr. Frud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of single people under the age of 25 years who live independently and claim benefit in Cambridgeshire, North-East.

Mr. Lyell: I regret this information is not available.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons have been deprived of unemployment or supplementary benefit for (a) refusing offers of employment and (b) voluntarily leaving employment in each year since 1979.

Mr. Major: The table shows the number of people disqualified for unemployment benefit under Section 20(1)(b) of the Social Security Act 1975 because of refusal or failure to apply for a situation or refusal to accept that situation when offered and the number disqualified under Section 20(1)(a) because of voluntarily leaving employment.

Year	Section 20(1)(b)	Section 20(1)(a)
1979	6,954	409,490
1980	7,950	344,403
1981	4,071	241,074
1982	2,181	248,280
1983	1,467	257,289
1985	1,503	295,041
1986	1,385	227,986

Notes:
(1) The figures for 1984 are not available.
(2) The 1986 figures are for January to September inclusive.

The number of people in receipt of supplementary benefit subject to a voluntary unemployment deduction under regulation 8 of the Supplementary Benefit Requirements Regulations 1983, as a consequence of disqualification under section 20(1)(b) or section 20(1)(a), is not available.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he proposes to take to increase the level of uptake of means-tested benefits.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 9 March 1987, c. 73]: The Government ensure a wide distribution of leaflets, claim forms and information sheets. Many of these have been redesigned to make them more easily understood, and many have been translated for use by claimants from ethnic minority groups.

In addition, the Department ensures that advice reaches as many potential beneficiaries as possible by identifying the most effective and practical means of communication. For example, supplementary benefit claim forms are issued routinely to all retirement pensioners, widows, unemployed claimants and sickness benefit claimants. Families with children are alerted to the existence of family income supplement by means of an insert in child benefit allowance books.

The nationwide "Freefone" service gives the public free telephone access to experienced staff who are able to give advice to inquiries on a wide range of social security matters. It handled 600,000 calls during the past year.

There are also a wide variety of initiatives taken at regional and local levels to promote awareness of the benefits available. In addition to the regional information officers, many local offices have appointed their own local information officers. Staff are encouraged to co-operate with responsible and well organised local authority take-up campaigns.

Wherever possible the opportunity is taken by local offices to send representatives to meetings, to give talks to people who come into contact with potential claimants, and to participate in radio and television programmes giving advice and information on benefits.

The Government are also seeking to make the social security system more easily understood—this is one of the basic principles underlying the changes introduced in the Social Security Act 1986.

To help ensure a better public awareness of the benefits system, we shall be explaining these changes as clearly as possible in the coming months. This will be achieved through a comprehensive communications strategy, and, with the help of professional advice, we shall be revising many forms and leaflets to make them easier for the public to understand.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the departmental budget devoted to promoting increased uptake of means-tested benefits.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 9 March 1987, c. 73]: The Department's planned budget for publicising social security is £6·7 million for 1986-87.

Families (Benefits)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) the number of families on family income supplement and the number with children, (b) the number of one-parent families drawing the special allowance, (c) the number of families on unemployment benefit drawing social security and the number with children, (d) the number of other families on social security and the number with children, (e) the number of families paid other kinds of dependency addition and (f) the number of children covered by each of the foregoing categories.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Severe Weather Payments

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims were received by the Greenock and Port Glasgow Department of Health and Social Security supplementary benefit office for single payments in respect of the exceptionally severe weather in January; how many of these claims have been processed; and how many are outstanding.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the form requested. However, up to 10 March 1987—the latest date for which figures are available—the Greenock and Port Glasgow local offices had made approximately 17,000 exceptionally cold weather £5 payments.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of claimants at the Greenock and Port Glasgow Department of Health and Social Security supplementary benefit offices who were entitled to exceptionally severe weather payments actually claimed for the payments in January of this year.

Mr. Major: I regret that the information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Diabetics (Novo Pen)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if disposable needles for diabetics using the Novo Pen will be available free.

Mrs. Currie: The Novo Pen insulin injecting devices and the disposable needles for use with them are already available free to diabetics who require them on clinical grounds through the hospital service.

Doctors and Nurses

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to improve the pay and conditions of service of doctors and nurses in the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The pay of National Health Service doctors and nurses is currently under consideration by the independent review bodies who will report to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in due course. The pay levels now in force incorporate all review body recommendations made in the lifetime of this Government. Conditions of service are discussed regularly with the professions concerned in the appropriate negotiating fora. Topics under consideration include, for doctors, the introduction of a new hospital intermediate level service grade and, for nurses, a review of the clinical grading structure.

Mentally Handicapped Patients (Guardians)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider making provision for the appointment of a guardian for a mentally handicapped patient where the parents are unable to exercise that function; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: There are powers under the Mental Health Act 1983 to place under guardianship mentally impaired people who have reached the age of 16, if it is necessary in their interests or for the protection of others. Mentally impaired children under 16 may, in appropriate circumstances, be received into the care of a local authority under Section 2 of the Child Care Act 1980 or placed in the care of a local authority under a care order if the criteria in Section 1 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969 are satisfied. A review of the law relating to children is currently under way and we will keep under review the need for any further measures in the interests of mentally handicapped adults.

Retirement Pensioners

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the sterling value of basic state retirement pensions to a single person and a married couple in each of the European Economic Community member states.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Pensioners (Benefits)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pensioners, and what percentage have (i) other state benefits than retirement pensions, (ii) occupational pensions, (iii) state earnings-related pensions and (iv) income from savings which is in each case (a) £0-£1 to £5 per week, (b) £5-£10 per week, (c) £10-£20 per week, (d) £20-£30 per week, (e) £30-£40 per week, (f) £40-£50 per week, (g) £50-£60 per week, (h) £60-£70 per week, (i) £70-£80 per week, (j) £80-£90 per week, (k) £90-£100 per week and (l) more than £100 per week.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Low-calorie Diets

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy (COMA) has completed its report on very low calorie diets; and when he expects to publish it.

Mrs. Currie: Preparation of the report is not yet complete. No publication date has been fixed.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give his latest estimate of the total number of claims for mobility allowance refused on grounds of age at the latest available date; and what consideration he has given to raising the upper age limit of eligibility for mobility allowance.

Mr. Major: During 1986, a total of 13,940 claims for mobility allowance were disallowed on age grounds. The limit of age 75 for the payment of the allowance will not affect any recipients before November 1989 and we shall consider whether or not the legislation should be amended nearer that time.

Health Expenditure

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest information on the revenue deficit in relation to spending of each district health authority at the end of the current fiscal year 1986-87.

Mr. Newton: Regional health authorities are responsible for monitoring district health authorities' spending. Detail of each district's spending is not therefore collected centrally during the financial year.

AIDS

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information is available to his Department about the probability of a mother with the AIDS virus giving it to her unborn child.

Mr. Newton: The presence of antibodies in a baby's blood is not an accurate guide to infection and so it is not possible to determine with certainty whether a new-born baby born to an infected mother is itself infected. Also, in those babies who are born infected, it is not known how many acquired the infection at birth rather than before birth. Current expert advice is that about one in two babies born to an infected mother themselves carry the infection.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate how many children have caught the AIDS virus from their mothers prior to birth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: There have been seven reports to the communicable disease surveillance centre of AIDS cases in babies of infected mothers in the United Kingdom. To the end of February 1987, there had been 10 reports of HIV infection in the babies of infected mothers in England and Wales and by the end of December 1986 there had been 42 similar reports in Scotland.

Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is in a position to make a further statement on the implementation of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Major: I am pleased to announce that, following discussion with the local authority associations, I have today made a commencement order to bring into force on 1 April 1987 sections 4 (except paragraph (b)), 8(1), 9 and 10 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986. I hope that it will be possible to bring section 11 into force later this year.

I have discussed with the local authority associations how best to proceed towards implementation of the rest of the Act, in particular sections 5 and 6 which deal with disabled school leavers, given the resource implications. We agreed that there would be urgent discussions at official level to look in more detail at the costs, and that I should meet the local authority associations in May to review progress.

NHS (Pay)

Mr. Stevens asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how much nurses' pay has increased in real terms (a) between the implementation of the Halsbury award in 1974 and May 1979, (b) since May 1979 and (c) since the establishment of the pay review body in 1984;

(2) what the gross pay of staff nurses and ward sisters was in (a) 1974 after the implementation of the Halsbury award, (b) May 1979, (c) in 1984 prior to the establishment of the pay review body, and (d) following the 1986 pay award;

(3) how much the pay of (a) consultants, (b) house officers and (c) general practitioners, has increased in real terms (i) between February 1974 and May 1979 and (ii) since May 1979.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have replies as soon as possible.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to the reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe on 27 January, Official Report, column 226, he will list those authorities which made no arrangements for the provision to disabled people of (a) telephones, (b) aids to daily living or (c) adaptations in the last year for which information is available; if he is satisfied that not one disabled person in those authorities needed the particular service; and if he will make a further statement.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 9 February 1987, c. 130-31]: It is for the relevant local authority to satisfy itself as to what is necessary to meet the needs of a particular disabled person under section 2(1) of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970.

Those local authorities which made no provision for each of the items specified for the year ending 31 March 1986 are listed in the table.

The table refers only to provision by social services departments. In some areas, some or all housing adaptations for disabled people are provided by housing authorities.

Vehicle Emissions (Health)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what research he is funding, or is intending to fund, on the possible links between vehicle emissions and respiratory disease.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 24 March 1987]: None. Investigations of effects of certain pollutants that are common to vehicle emissions and other sources have however been funded by the Department in recent years and findings indicate that street levels are not sufficient to cause concern.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Chancellor gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Mr. Watts).

EC Grants (Additionality)

22. Mr. Galley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in his policy towards the European Community's interpretation of the additionality principle with regard to European Economic Community grants.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Government's policy remains, as it has always been, that receipts from the European Community enable United Kingdom public expenditure to be maintained at levels higher than could otherwise have been afforded.

Public Sector Pay

24. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on pay variations in the public sector.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Different levels of pay exist in the public sector because the relative pay levels of groups involved are settled on their individual merits. Relativities change as pay changes to take account of such factors as affordability and the need to recruit, retain and motivate people of the right calibre.

32. Mr. Leigh asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of the current rate of inflation on the public sector borrowing requirement.

Mr. MacGregor: Firm fiscal and monetary policies within the framework of the medium term financial strategy have brought about substantial reductions in both inflation and public sector borrowing. However, inflation is just one of a whole range of factors which affect public finances.

Interest Rates

Procurement Procedures

40. Mr. Evennett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps his Department takes to ensure that Government procurement procedures are competitive.

Earnings

41. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy towards differentials between high and low earners in the light of the low pay unit report published on 9 March, a copy of which has been forwarded to him.

Mr. MacGregor: Differentials are necessary to motivate skilled workers and to encourage people to train for skilled and professional jobs, requiring qualifications. But since this Government took office there has been a general rise in living standards for those below average earnings as well as for those above average earnings. Between 1978-79 and 1987-88 the real take home pay of a married man on average earnings is expected to rise 22½ per cent. and a married man on ½ average earnings 18 per cent.

Charities

42. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review the taxation position of charities.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Charities already benefit from a variety of tax reliefs, which have been substantially increased since 1979, and I have no plans for a general review. Last year, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor said he would be considering whether further legislation was needed to restrict abuse of the tax reliefs for charities. The Government are not proposing any further measures in this area in this year's Finance Bill, but will be keeping the working of the 1986 provisions under review.

Budget (Oil Industry)

43. Mr. Kennedy asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will assess the likely impact of his Budget proposals upon the prospects for the oil and oil-related construction sector; and if he will make a statement.

Inflation

44. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of inflation.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The increase in retail prices for the twelve months ending February 1987 was 3·9 per cent., an increase of 0·4 per cent. over January. The slight rise was mainly the result of higher prices for petrol, fresh vegetables, cars and car maintenance.

Overdrafts

48. Mr. Janner asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the chairmen of the clearing banks and the Bank of England concerning amendments to be proposed to the Consumer Credit Act in relation to overdrafts.

66. Mr. Rogers asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will undertake to monitor the impact of his Budget on the economy of Wales.

67. Mr. Ames asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received regarding the zero-rating for value added tax of equipment purchased by the hospital radio organisation.

Personal Equity Plan

68. Mr. Hubbard-Miles asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of applications for personal equity plans so far received have come from taxpayers paying tax at basic rate only.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Full information is not available because subscribers to a personal equity plan will obtain tax relief automatically without having to give details of their tax status to the Inland Revenue. What information is available suggests that substantial numbers of investors are not currently liable to higher rate tax.

Courier Companies

69. Mr. Grylls asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he intends to amend the requirements of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in relation to private sector international courier companies.

Mr. Brooke: Separate customs facilities for clearing courier traffic are provided at Heathrow. There are no plans to amend customs entry requirements to provide exceptional treatment for couriers.

Redundancy Fund and North Sea Oil

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will give up-to-date figures and add a forecast for 1987-88 in the form of the answer dated 25 July 1986 concerning expenditure from the redundancy fund and revenue from North sea oil.

Mr. MacGregor: A forecast of total benefits paid to the unemployed, of redundancy payments from the redundancy fund and of Government revenue from North sea oil in 1987-88 is given below. Revised estimates for 1981-82 to 1986-87 are also given. Estimates for 1973-74 to 1980-81, given in the answer of 25 July 1986, remain unchanged.

	(a) Total benefits paid to unemployed people[1] (£ million cash)	(b) Total Redundancy payments from the Redundancy Fund (£ million cash)	(c) (a) plus (b) as a proportion of Gross Domestic Product (percentage)	(d) Revenue from North Sea Tax[2] (£ million cash)

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make the gathering of information on ethnic origins compulsory, and publish the percentage of entrants to his Department who failed to respond to the ethnic origins questionnaire.

Mr. Brooke: Surveys of the ethnic origin of staff in post and new entrants to the Civil Service have been carried out in agreement with the Council of Civil Service Unions on the basis of voluntary self-classification. There are no plans at present to change to a compulsory system. However, the Civil Service and the Council of Civil Service Unions are keen to improve the data base and are discussing practical ways in which this can be done.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 9 March 1987 reporting the number of new recruits to Her Majesty's Treasury (non-industrials only) in the period 1 October 1985 to end September 1986. During that period 34·25 per cent. failed to respond to the questionnaire. I would also refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister, on 24 March 1987.

Child Benefit

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will provide estimates for child benefit costs on the same basis for 1987-88 as in the figures given in his answer of 25 July, Official Report, column 667.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Personal Incomes (Statistics)

Mr. Meacher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the increase in real personal disposable income each year since 1960; and what comparable information he has regarding France, Germany, United States of America, and Japan.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Wigley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table indicating, on the basis of the most recent information available, what the average pre-tax capita personal income is in each of the standard regions of the United Kingdom.

Mr. MacGregor: The latest estimates were published in table 4 (page 92) of the appendix to the article "Regional Accounts 1985" in the November 1986 issue of Economic Trends (No. 397).

Beer

Mr. Lawrence asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost to the Exchequer of not increasing the duty payable on beer in line with the cost of living index.

Mr. Brooke: I refer my hon. Friend to table 4.1 of the 1987-88 Financial Statement and Budget Report (item 63).

ENERGY

Standing Charges

Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for Energy what further consideration he has given to the effect of abolishing the gas and electricity industries' standing charge system in order to assist pensioners and those on low incomes.

Mr. Peter Walker: Abolishing standing charges would significantly disadvantage a great many pensioners and also many on low incomes.

Standing charges cover the cost of necessary emergency services, as well as those of meter reading, accounting and billing. These costs arise no matter how much or how little fuel is used. They reflect the fixed costs which the industries incur in maintaining a constant and safe supply to each consumer's home.

Independent reviews carried out by consultants in 1982 found that the level of standing charges did reflect these costs. At the same time, estimates suggested that abolition of standing charges would disadvantage many in vulnerable groups, for the following reasons.

The abolition of standing charges for all electricity and gas consumers in Great Britain would mean a loss of revenue for the industries in excess of £1,100 million, or over £250 million in the case of pensioners alone. The industries would have to recover that lost revenue through an alternative tariff structure, which would give rise to substantial increases in the unit rates for fuel. Depending on the tariff structure chosen, these increases might be of the order of 15 per cent.

The higher unit rates would penalise those among the least well off who need a lot of fuel. These include many of the old, sick, disabled and those with large families. The precise effect on them would depend upon their patterns of consumption and expenditure and the tariffs in force at the time. But it was estimated that the incorporation of the standing charge into a unit rate would result in higher fuel bills for the following approximate numbers of these groups: over 2 million pensioner households; over 500,000 households relying primarily on state pensions for income; over 500,000 households on incomes a little above the level at which they would receive supplementary benefit. In many cases the bills of these consumers would be higher by a significant amount.

The corresponding benefit to other members of these groups would have been much smaller. Moreover, of the total number of consumers benefiting, most would be those who did not need it, such as proprietors of lock-ups and owners of second homes.

Since 1983, electricity and gas prices overall have fallen by 12 per cent. and 8 per cent. and standing charges by 8 per cent. and 24 per cent., respectively, in real terms. Gas standing charges were also reduced in cash terms, by £1 a quarter, in 1986.

Standing charges remain the fairest way of recovering the costs attributable to each consumer, and I do not propose to take powers to abolish them. They are favoured by the consumers' councils of both, industries, as well as having been endorsed in the 1976 publication by the then Government "Energy Tariffs and the Poor", and by the European Council.

Successive Governments have concluded that energy tariff adjustments do not provide a suitable means of giving social assistance. The social security system provides a more effective means of targeting assistance on those in genuine need. As far as fuel costs are concerned, the main form of help is through the supplementary benefit scale rates, and also through the heating additions which in 1984-85 totalled some £400 million. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services intends that the amount spent on heating additions will be included in the resources to be made available for the new income support scheme which will be introduced in April 1988. This scheme will provide assistance with all day-to-day living expenses, including fuel costs. Extra help will be made available through premiums to those in the greatest need — pensioners, the sick, the disabled, and families.

Greater London

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements exist within his Department, within the central headquarters or in any regional or sub-regional organisations, for dealing with his responsibilities regarding public services or any other function in respect of the Greater London area; and how many full-time equivalent staff are involved in such work.

Mr. Dunn: The staff are deployed for the most part according to the nature of the function, not according to the local education authority involved. It is therefore not possible to identify the number of full-time equivalent staff involved in work concerning the exercise of my right hon. Friend's responsibilities as they affect the Greater London area.

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science with which Departments, and non-departmental bodies his Department and its related non-departmental public bodies has consulted during 1986-87 in respect of services provided within Greater London; approximately how often such consultations have taken place; and what issues were discussed.

Mr. Dunn: The Department consults constantly with a wide range of bodies on a wide range of issues.

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether there are any proposals to change the arrangements for discharging his Department's responsibilities regarding public services or any other function in respect of the Greater London area during the forthcoming year.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has no plans to change the present arrangements.

School Closures

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of schools referred to him for permission to proceed with closure or merger he has refused in each of the last 10 years; and how long from receipt to decision has been taken to issue the decision on average minimum time and maximum time taken in each of the years in question.

Mr. Dunn: Information is not available in precisely the form reqested. The table shows the percentage of schools whose proposed closure was rejected by my right hon. Friend or his predecessors in the period from August 1980, when the Education Act 1980 came into force, and December 1986. Information about the time taken to decide closure proposals is not readily available, but my right hon. Friend has undertaken to decide proposals within six months of their publication, unless they present particular difficulties.

Lancashire (Capital Allocations)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his meeting on 24 March regarding capital allocations with Lancashire county council representatives.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend received an all-party delegation from the Lancashire county council on 24 March to discuss the Lancashire education authority's capital allocation for 1987-88. The delegation expressed concern that the allocation of £5·994 million represented only 32 per cent. of the authority's planned expenditure, and was only half the size of its allocation for 1986-87. The delegation explained that the size of the allocation meant that the authority would be unable to make progress in replacing and improving old and sub-standard school accommodation; and asked for an increase in the allocation.

My right hon. Friend said that he could not increase the authority's allocation for 1987-88, since the available resources had been distributed. He explained that the Government treated all authorities on exactly the same basis in considering their capital expenditure plans, and that the reason Lancashire had not received a larger allocation was that the authority's plans for capital expenditure on schools failed to take account of the Government's stated priorities: these were, first, to meet the cost (up to a limit previously notified to the authority) of capital projects which had already started, and, second, to allow for projects designed either to provide for basic need in areas of population growth or to remove surplus school accommodation. He pointed out that two thirds of the Lancashire authority's planned spending was for improvement or replacement projects, to which the Government gave a lower priority in allocating the available resources.

My right hon. Friend said that the Department was ready to discuss with the Lancashire authority its plans for expenditure in subsequent years, and suggested that officials from the Department hold an early meeting with officers from the authority.

Higher Education

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish his White Paper on the future of polytechnics and colleges of higher education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 17 February at column 584.

Inspectors (Reports)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Yeovil on 19 March, Official Report, column 564, concerning statistical and financial information provided by local education authorities, if he will place copies in the Library of the standard forms used to collect this information in each recent year; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I am arranging for copies of the forms sent to local authorities in 1984, 1985 and 1986 to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Yeovil on 9 March, Official Report, columns 22-23, concerning inspections of secondary schools by Her Majesty's inspectors, if he will publish a table showing, for each type of routine or specific inspection (a) the number of such inspections in the last year, (b) the number of reports of such inspections in the last year for which the report has not yet been published and (c) the target or expected number of such inspections in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: In 1986, Her Majesty's inspectors carried out 65 reporting inspections of secondary schools in England. Twelve of the reports have been published and 53 are in preparation. The Her Majesty's Inspectorate work programme for 1987 has not yet been finalised, but the number of such inspections is not expected to be significantly different. In addition to inspections leading to published reports, Her Majesty's Inspectorate carries out a large number of shorter informal visits to secondary schools, for a variety of purposes.

Expenditure

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state the amount of money spent, per child in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in Derbyshire, Staffordshire and Nottinghamshire, respectively.

Mr. Dunn: The latest information is provided in the following table.

Net institutional expenditure per pupil—1985-86

	Primary schools £	Secondary schools £
Derbyshire	780	1,125
Staffordshire	815	1,125
Nottinghamshire	840	1,220

Soviet Studies

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he is taking to stimulate Soviet studies in universities and polytechnics.

Mr. Walden: Those engaged in the field of Soviet and East European studies are undertaking a task of importance to this country. At a time when changes of great significance appear to be taking place in the Soviet Union, and when greater contacts are taking place between our two countries, it is especially important that the United Kingdom should have the expertise to follow and analyse what is happening.

Following the Foreign Affairs Select Committee report on Soviet and East European studies, published in May 1986, The Government undertook to consult representative figures from the academic world, the University Grants Committee, the Economic and Social Research Council, and interested Government Departments. In fulfilment of that undertaking I chaired a seminar on 30 January this year which brought together specialists from a number of universities and polytechnics, at which fears were expressed about the future of work in this field. Because of the national importance of Soviet and East European studies, I am considering with my colleagues in other Departments whether steps might be taken to improve the position.

ENVIRONMENT

Thamesmead

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 10 March, Official Report, column 109, if he will publish the letter issued by his Department on 6 March stating that he intends to direct the London residuary body to dispose of Thamesmead to Thamesmead town, the disposal to take place on 1 April.

Mr. Chope: I have today placed a copy of the letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when Thamesmead Town Ltd. will take responsibility for the debt attached to Thamesmead;

(2) how many officials from his Department are on the board of Thamesmead Town Ltd.

Mr. John Patten: I shall answer these questions shortly.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will detail in the Official Report the valuation that has been placed on the land and buildings at Thamesmead by the district valuer.

Mr. Chope [pursuant to his answer, 19 March 1987]: The valuation prepared by the district valuer, based on an estimate of 300 sales a year of vacant and tenanted property, was £25 million at 31 March 1986.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he plans to publish the auditors' report for 1985-86 and 1986-87 for the London Docklands Development Corporation;

(2) what plans the London Dockland Development Corporation has for Pura Foods of Leamouth.

Mr. John Patten: I shall answer these questions shortly.

Loft Insulation (Lichfield)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the correspondence his Department has had with the Lichfield district council in respect of the payments of grants for the provision of loft insulation under the Homes Insulation Act 1978 through the housing investment programme.

Mr. John Patten: Lichfield district council has applied for, and the Department has granted, an additional allocation of resources under the homes insulation scheme.

Pollution (Beaches)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress towards removal of pollution from United Kingdom beaches; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I and my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for local government and the environment in Scotland announced on 3 February that 389 waters were now included within the scope of the "bathing water" directive (76/160/EEC); 23 of these are in Scotland.

There is now an obligation to monitor all these waters and, where necessary, to bring them up to the directive's standards. Nationally we are spending some £70 million annually in the United Kingdom on remedial works to improve coastal bathing water quality.

More than half the waters surveyed in 1986 already meet the directive's standards. Our aim is for all the waters to meet the directive's standards, although inevitably this will take a number of years.

Ansell's Brewery, Birmingham

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply of Tuesday 17 March, Official Report, column 436, he will take into account the value of scrap copper and other non-building materials before paying derelict land grant in respect of the former Ansell's brewery in Birmingham.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that the vast majority of valuable equipment, incuding copper and other non-building materials, was removed by Ansells brewery prior to the site being acquired by Birmingham city council for demolition purposes. The demolition contractors will be responsible for disposing of normal scrap building materials excepting certain antiquities with an historical value which will go to the city council.

Consultancy Services

Mr. Neil Thorne asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to require greater openness in the provision of design and other consultancy services in local government; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Boyson: Our planned legislation on competitive tendering for local authority services will include a power to add activities, via secondary legislation, to those which will appear on the face of the Bill. This will enable us to consider, in the light of experience with the initial list, whether others—such as those referred to by my hon. Friend—should also be opened up to competition. But there is no need to wait for legislation: authorities should be reaping the benefits of competition now, by voluntary action.

Greater London

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements are expected to exist during 1987-88 for analysing and co-ordinating those responsibilities of Departments of State which relate to local government in the Greater London area; and how far they will vary from those of 1986-87.

Dr. Boyson: My Department, and other Departments, make arrangements as appropriate on any matters of mutual concern which may arise.

Cost Floor Regulations

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to amend the cost floor regulations made under the Housing Act 1980 according to which any property built after 1974 cannot be sold at less than the cost of building; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: I shall answer this question shortly.

Housing and Planning Act 1986

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when section 6 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986 will be brought into effect.

Mr. Tracey: I shall answer this question shortly.

Urban Programme

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total value of urban programme moneys spent in (a) Greater Manchester, and (b) the city of Manchester (i) at current prices, and (ii) in constant 1987-88 prices for the years 1982-83 to 1987-88, inclusive.

Mr. Tracey: I shall answer this question shortly.

Flats (Crown Sales)

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the procedures adopted when the Crown sells blocks of flats.

Mr. John Patten: I can confirm that the various Crown authorities are prepared, where they intend to sell any residential property comprising flats, to give the tenants of such flats an opportunity of first refusal analogous to the relevant provisions in part I of the Landlord and Tenant (No. 2) Bill.

WALES

EEC (Grants and Loans)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the amount received in Wales in the form of the various loans and grants by the EEC for each of the years of our membership.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The information requested is as follows:

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Bahrain

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the number and identity of British citizens employed in the security service of Bahrain; what guidance he has given to the embassy at Bahrain regarding advice to be given to British citizens in such employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We are aware that the Government of Bahrain employ a number of British citizens in their security service. These are United Kingdom expatriates who have been directly recruited. We have no responsibility deriving from their employment.

We do not exercise authority over the employees of an independant Government nor offer them advice in the carrying out of their duties.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the official response there has been from the United States of America to the United Kingdom compromise proposal on challenge inspection for the verification of a chemical weapons treaty.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool Garston (Mr. Loyden) on 24 March at column 101.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the official response there has been from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to the United Kingdom's compromise proposal on challenge inspection for the verification of a chemical weapons treaty.

Mr. Eggar: The Soviet Union has said that it is willing to negotiate on the basis of the United Kingdom proposal. Negotiations on all aspects of a ban on chemical weapons are continuing at the conference on disarmament in Geneva.

Lebanon

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide such information as is available to Her Majesty's Government or the United Nations, concerning Israeli incursions into Lebanese air space.

Mr. Eggar: The Israeli air force carried out 18 air strikes in Lebanon in 1986 and a further eight this year. It overflies Lebanese territory regularly. We do not maintain detailed records of such flights.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make the gathering of information on ethnic origins compulsory, and publish the percentage of entrants to his Department who failed to respond to the ethnic origins questionnaire.

Mr. Tom King: A survey of the ethnic origin of staff-in-post and new entrants to the Northern Ireland Office (Home Civil Service group) has been carried out on the basis of voluntary self-classification. There are no plans at present to change to a compulsory system.

Information on the number of new entrants who responded to the questionnaires, and those who did not, between October 1985 and September 1986 was given in my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member on 10 March 1987, at columns 142-43.

Information on the response rates among entrants who joined the Northern Ireland Office on loan from other Government Departments is not readily available.

Food Aid

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what amounts of free European Economic Community surplus foods were made available for distribution to the needy in Northern Ireland; what estimated percentage of this food still remains available for distribution; when this scheme ends; if he will make a statement on the operation of the scheme in Northern Ireland; and if he will thank all the voluntary workers who responded to the challenge of this scheme.

Mr. Viggers: The amount of food available was not specified on either a national or a regional basis. The European Commission made provision for the release of intervention products and the purchase of other foods on the open market.

The scheme ends on 31 March 1987.

In Northern Ireland, as elsewhere in the United Kingdom, distribution has been carried out under the auspices of certain recognised charitable organisations which have met the demands on them admirably. the organisations were not restricted in their uptake of food under the scheme. Intervention board statistics show that up to week ending 13 March 1987, 1,253 tonnes of butter, 403 tonnes of beef, 19,162 pints of milk and 395 tonnes of cheese have been distributed in Northern Ireland.

The scheme had to be introduced as speedily as possible and I fully appreciate and thank the recognised organisations and other charitable groups for the great work which they have done for the needy in Northern Ireland by responding so enthusiastically and promptly to this very considerable task.

Earnings

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the level of average earnings of (a) women and (b) men in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: The latest information available, as at April 1986, is as follows:

	Average gross weekly earnings[1] £	Average gross hourly earnings[1] p
Women	128·1	311·4
Men	182·2	430·6

[1] Earnings relate to full-time employees on adult rates and include overtime.

PRIME MINISTER

SERPS

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her oral answer to the hon. Member for Burnley on 24 March, how many years' maximum contributions were possible in SERPS in 1979; and what is the figure now.

The Prime Minister: The state earnings-related pensions scheme began in April 1978; a person retiring on 6 April 1979 could therefore achieve one year's contribution. For someone on average earnings, the extra benefit amounted to 95p a week. This figure has, of course, been uprated in each year since. A person retiring on 6 April 1986, with a maximum of eight years in the scheme, would have received £16·25 in additional pension if he had been on average earnings. It is estimated that for April 1987, with a maximum of nine years contributions, a newly-retiring pensioner who had been on average earnings would receive £20·05 a week.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Health Statistics)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest available figure for the number of AIDS sufferers, HIV carriers and hepatitis B carries among the prison population.

Mr. Mellor: The latest information available is for 24 February, at which date there was no reported case of diagnosed AIDS in the prison population of England and Wales. On the same date the population included 45 inmates reported as having been identified as HIV antibody positive. Corresponding information about current hepatitis B cases is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The latest analysis of the incidence of known cases is for the year ended 31 March 1986 during which 165 acute cases and 295 chronic cases (carriers) were recorded.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the measures taken by his Department to prevent the spread of HIV and hepatitis B in prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Guidance on the management of hepatitis B cases was issued by the prison department in August 1984 and revised in February 1985. In the latter month the first in a series of memoranda of guidance on the management of AIDS and HIV cases was also issued. The preventive measures taken locally include medical inquiry and examination of all prisoners at the reception stage, clinical investigation in appropriate cases, counselling and health education and the application of precautionary regime restrictions to prisoners known to be infected. The restrictions applied in a particular case are determined by the medical officer in the light of clinical and other factors and the guidance received from the Department.

Crime (Clear-up Rate)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to seek to increase the clear-up rate of crime in England and Wales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We shall continue our efforts to ensure that the police are adequately resourced for this purpose. Local policing priorities and methods of operation are properly matters for chief officers to decide in the light of local circumstances; but, in their work to detect and prevent crime, they will be looking for support from the whole community.

Hollesley Bay Detention Centre

Mr. Birmingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what complaints of ill treatment he has received from inmates and other sources at Hollesley Bay detention centre during the last three months.

Mr. Mellor: Complaints concerning two inmates have been made recently by the probation service in a letter to the governor of Hollesley Bay youth custody centre and detention centre, who is investigating them.

Crime (Cumbria)

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on the increase in the number of crimes in Cumbria since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: Since 1979 recorded crime in Cumbria has increased by 55 per cent. compared with 51 per cent. in England and Wales as a whole.

Passports

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home department why section 8*(a)* is still included on the passport application form; and what use is made of the information obtained therefrom.

Mr. Waddington: A woman, but not a man, may have acquired, or been exempted from loss of, British nationality directly as a result of an existing or former marriage. Section 8*(a)* of the passport application form seeks to elicit the information required to establish such a route to citizenship.

Rewards

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many rewards of £5,000 or more were facilitated by the Metropolitan police in each year since 1975; and what was the highest single amount in each year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that no reward payment of £5,000 or more has been made by the Metropolitan police from public funds in any year since 1975. On occasion, in order to maintain the confidentiality of informants, the Metropolitan police also facilitate the payment of rewards offered by private institutions such as Insurance companies, banks, and so on. It is not the practice of the Metropolitan police to release details of any reward payment.

Police Officers (Resignation)

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what regulations govern the resignation of a senior police officer of (a) the City of London police or (b) the Metropolitan police in order to accept a position in industry or commerce.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: An officer below the rank of assistant chief constable (commander in the Metropolitan and City of London forces) must give one month's written notice of intention to resign. Assistant chief constables and above who have reached the age of 55 can resign after giving three months' written notice but need the police authority's consent if they wish to resign at an earlier age. Police officers are free to accept business appointments on leaving the police service.

Southwark (Racial Incidents)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of reported cases of racial incidents within the London borough of Southwark for each month of each of the last seven years; and how many of these cases each year led to arrests being made.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to replies I gave to questions from the hon. Member for Newham, North-East (Mr. Banks) on 4 December 1986 at columns 711-14 and the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 10 March 1987 at columns 121-22. Information for the years prior to 1983 is not available, and monthly breakdowns for the years 1983-85 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Beckingham and Rollestone Army Camps

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the cost of converting Beckingham army camp in Lincolnshire into a temporary prison in 1981;

(2) what was the cost of converting Rollestone army camp in Wiltshire into a temporary prison in 1981.

Mr. Mellor: The capital costs of converting Beckingham and Rollestone camps to temporary prisons in 1981 were as follows:

Beckingham	235,145
Rollestone	162,288

Other costs, for example, manpower and supplies, are not now readily identifiable.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the prison department relinquished Rollestone and Beckingham army camps; and to what use each camp was subsequently put.

Mr. Mellor: The temporary prisons at Rollestone and Beckingham were vacated and returned to the Ministry of Defence for normal use at the end of November 1981.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans his Department has to take over (a) Rollestone, (b) Beckingham and (c) any other army camps for use as temporary prisons during the forthcoming financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The temporary use of military camps for the accommodation of prisoners is among the options that would be considered should the need arise.

Offenders

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if, pursuant to the Prime Minister's answer of 19 March, Official Report, column 1036, he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the numbers and proportion of offenders, broken down by age groups;

(2) if, pursuant to the Prime Minister's answer of 19 March, Official Report, column 1036, he will publish in the Official Report the statistical evidence that the peak age of offenders is 15 years.

Mr. Mellor: This information is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales." (Table 5.21 of chapter 5 of Cm. 10 gives the figures for 1985, figure 5.6 of the same chapter shows that the peak age of offending has varied little since 1965.)

Crime Prevention

Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further response he has had to his proposals on crime prevention.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We continue to receive encouraging responses to our efforts to improve crime prevention. The number of neighbourhood watch schemes continues to increase, demonstrating the enthusiasm of the public for this approach; local authorities are increasingly undertaking crime prevention work, often with Government funding; over 8,000 places have been approved under the community programme to enable voluntary, private and public sector organisations to employ unemployed people on crime prevention projects; and we are working with the Confederation of British Industry, the Association of British Chambers of Commerce and other private sector organisations to develop private sector involvement.

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion and actual sum of money has been allocated under the urban programme and through the urban housing renewal unit for crime prevention measures.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply.

The urban programme makes an important contribution to crime prevention and tackling the effects of crime through support to 380 projects in 1986-87, totalling about £10 million. Initiatives supported include schemes run in various urban areas by NACRO, and crime prevention and community projects run by the police in Birmingham and Newcastle.

About 30 per cent. (some £17 million) of the resources made available through estate action in 1986-87 are being used to support measures to provide increased security for residents on run-down council estates. These include controlled entry arrangements; video surveillance systems; adaptations and remodelling; provision of defensible space; improved lighting; new locks for doors and windows. All these physical measures are being supported by strengthened management presence on estates — which may involve concierge-type arrangements, door porters, resident caretakers, block patrollers and so on.

Police Act 1964

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many settlements of civil actions against the Metropolitan police have been approved by the Secretary of State for the Home Department in each of the last seven years under section 48(2)(b) of the Police Act 1964.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [pursuant to his reply of 2 March 1987, c. 470-71]: The Metropolitan police has standing authority for the settlement of civil actions against the force which do not exceed £2,000, excluding legal costs. Home Office approval is required for settlements above that amount. In 1985 Home Office approval was given to 16 cases and in 1986 to 13 cases. The number of cases approved in earlier years is not readily available.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Stocks

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to conduct studies into the logistic and manpower consequences of reducing the United Kingdom's nuclear stocks.

Mr. Stanley: Such studies have been and will be carried out as necessary.

Cruise Missiles

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will now state the timetable for the deployment of cruise missiles at Molesworth.

Mr. Stanley: I have nothing to add to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) on 15 April 1986 at column 375.

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what date cruise missiles or cruise convoy components were stationed at RAF Molesworth and RAF Alconbury.

Mr. Stanley: There are no plans to station either cruise missiles or their associated vehicles at RAF Alconbury. Vehicles and equipment will continue to arrive at RAF Molesworth as it builds up to full operational readiness in 1988.

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether RAF Alconbury will be used as a base from which to carry out cruise dispersal exercises.

Mr. Stanley: There are no plans to use RAF Alconbury for this purpose.

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he intends to acquire new land for cruise missile dispersal exercises.

Mr. Stanley: There are no plans to acquire land specifically for this purpose, but because of the demand for training areas we have a general requirement to try to expand existing training areas where suitable land becomes available.

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Defence which Ministry of Defence police establishment in East Anglia will be responsible for policing cruise dispersals in East Anglia; and whether he has any plans to increase that establishment.

Mr. Stanley It is not our practice to provide details of specific security arrangements and plans.

Marconi

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he next plans to meet representatives of the Marconi group of companies; and what issues he intends to discuss.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the normal course of affairs, I, my ministerial colleagues and our officials would expect to meet representatives of the Marconi group of companies at regular and frequent intervals, given the amount of business between us.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will list all the projects which the Marconi group of companies is working on as part of the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) on 23 March at column 6 listing contracts placed by the Ministry of Defence. The available details of contracts or subcontracts placed by the United States Government or United States contractors have been provided on a confidential basis to the Defence Committee.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make the gathering of information on ethnic origins compulsory, and publish the percentage of entrants to his Department who failed to respond to the ethnic origins questionnaire.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given in response to this question by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 24 March at column 98.

Eastney Barracks

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total size of Eastney barracks; what proportion of the site is open space; and how many (a) listed and (b) unlisted buildings it contains.

Mr. Freeman: Eastney barracks occupies a site of some 37 acres of which 14 acres is open space. Eastney playing fields occupy a further 21 acres of open space. The barracks area contains six listed and 51 unlisted buildings. In addition, some of the earth embankments and boundary walls are scheduled as ancient monuments.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if there is to be a continued Marine presence at Eastney barracks, Portsmouth;

(2) if he will make a statement about future provision for the groups and organisations using the Eastney barracks, Portsmouth;

(3) if he will make a statement about the future of the Royal Marine Volunteer Cadet Corps at Eastney barracks, Portsmouth.

Mr. Freeman: It remains our intention to dispose of at least the major part of the Royal Marine barracks at Eastney. Suitable provision will be made either at Eastney or elsewhere for the units currently using the buildings there.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what groups and organisations currently use Eastney barracks in Portsmouth.

Mr. Freeman: The following groups and organisations currently use Eastney barracks:

(a) Headquarters Training Reserve and Special Forces Royal Marines;

(b) A small secretariat responsible for administration of non-public funds within the Royal Marines;

(c) The editor of the Royal Marines magazine, "Globe and Laurel", and his staff;
(d) The Royal Marines museum;
(e) The Royal Marines' historical archivist;
(f) A small Royal Marines Reserve detachment;
(g) A detachment of the Royal Marine Volunteer Cadet Corps;
(h) An official of the Property Services Agency also has an office in the barracks.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to dispose of the Eastney barracks site, Portsmouth.

Mr. Freeman: It is the intention to proceed as quickly as possible with the disposal of the Eastney barracks site once the extent of any residual Royal Marines presence there has been determined. The future of the Eastney playing fields will depend upon the outcome of a separate study.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many houses and flats are in the Eastney barracks, Portsmouth; and when they are to be sold.

Mr. Freeman: There are four houses and 10 flats within the Royal Marine barracks, Eastney. Any decision on disposals would have to be taken in the light of the prevailing requirement for married quarters in the Portsmouth port area as a whole.

Squadron Leader Hare

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 9 March, Official Report, column 945, if he will make a statement as to why Squadron Leader Hare was permitted to make a statement to the press subsequent to action being taken arising from his first statement, and as to why no further disciplinary action was considered necessary subsequent to the second breach.

Mr. Freeman: Squadron Leader Hare was interviewed immediately following the publication of further articles in the press about him. No disciplinary action was considered necessary.

Equestrian Events

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy that military vehicles or equipment should never be used for the transport of private horses owned by service personnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: If the purpose of a journey is related to authorised activity, military vehicles may be used to transport private horses owned by service personnel if this is the most cost-effective option. If it is not related to authorised activity, military vehicles may still be used subject to availability and to the full cost being recovered. I see no reason to alter this policy.

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy that volunteers only should be in attendance on duty at organised equestrian events involving service personnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Encouraging participation in sporting events is an important part of maintaining the well-being and physical efficiency of service personnel. There is generally no shortage of volunteers to organise and take part in such events; and all personnel selected for equestrian trades are volunteers. However, certain organisational duties in support of sporting events do not necessarily lend themselves to the use of volunteers.

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy that time spent participating in equestrian activity by officers, and currently treated as duty hours, should in future be counted against leave entitlement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No. Such a policy would not be consistent with the Army's policy on participation in sports and physical activity. It would also be contrary to the purpose for which leave is granted.

TRANSPORT

Cars (Business Purchases)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the number of cars bought by business in the most recent period of 12 months for which figures are available, together with a breakdown by engine size;

(2) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the estimated number of passenger cars owned by businesses of all kinds, the number and cost of new cars purchased by such businesses in the latest year for which information is available, the corresponding figures for cars used by the owners, directors and higher-paid employees of such businesses, together with such information as he has available generally or for particular groups of the size, cost or quality of car purchased.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: At the end of 1986, 2·04 million cars in Great Britain were registered in a company name. The number of these cars used by owners, directors and high-paid employees is not known. The Inland Revenue has estimated that some 1·15 million directors and higher-paid employees in the United Kingdom are expected to have a company car for private use in 1987-88.

Information about the number of new vehicle registrations in Great Britain in the 12 months to January 1987 is given in the table. Information about the cost of these vehicles is not available.

Severn Estuary Ports

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ensure that vessels over 10,000 dwt can continue to use the ports of the Severn estuary for the foreseeable future.

Mr. Michael Spicer: If it is eventually decided to construct a Severn barrage, then the capacity of the locks built into it would determine the size of vessels that could use the ports above the barrage line. On this point, I have nothing to add to the answer I gave my hon. Friend on 1 December 1986 at column 502. I am aware of no other foreseeable new restriction on access to ports in the estuary.

Helicopters (Testing and Maintenance)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to seek further powers to require adequate testing and maintenance of helicopters.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. The CAA has statutory responsibility for the airworthiness of helicopters on the United Kingdom register and has adequate powers in this respect.

Pelican Crossings (Accidents)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of accidents occurring on pelican crossings on major trunk roads for each of the last three years; and if he will distinguish how many of these accidents were fatal.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is as follows:

Accidents at Pelican crossings on trunk roads: Great Britain

	Fatal	Serious	Slight	Total
1983	19	161	554	734
1984	15	151	541	707

Japan Airlines

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he has any plans to transfer all Japan Airlines flights from Heathrow to Hurn airport;

(2) if he has any plans to move all Japan Airlines flights from Heathrow airport to Gatwick.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

EC Transport Council Meeting

Sir Fergus Montgomery asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the European Community Transport Council meeting on 23-24 March.

Mr. Moore: Further progress was made towards agreement on a "first step" on air transport liberalisation towards the 1992 internal market deadline. Other member states finally accepted our argument that cheap off-peak fares should be available to all categories of traveller and that unnecessarily restrictive fare conditions should be dropped. The only remaining mandatory conditions for such fares would be an advance purchase requirement and a cancellation-change of booking penalty. The Council accepted these ideas unanimously. The deadlock on fares has therefore been broken, but more work is needed on capacity and market access if — as the Commission rightly insists — there is to be an acceptable overall settlement by the end of June. The Belgians have helpfully timetabled an additional Aviation Council for 9 June and the Commission is giving us robust support.

The Council also discussed a number of inland transport issues. On road haulage liberalisation it was unfortunately not possible to reach agreement on a proposal for further increases in the Community quota of road haulage permits for 1987. A further attempt to agree quota increases will be made in June. There was a preliminary exchange of views on road haulage taxation issues. The Council also discussed the financial aspects of the proposed medium-term transport infrastructure programme but made little progress in resolving outstanding differences between member states. The presidency reported on discussions with Austria and Switzerland on the problems of transit traffic through these countries and there was a brief discussion of speed limits. The Council held a minute's silence in memory of the victims of the Zeebrugge ferry tragedy and I was able to thank my fellow Transport Ministers for the assistance given during the rescue operation.

CIVIL SERVICE

Trade Unions (Meetings)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister for the Civil Service when he last met representatives of the Civil Service trade unions; what subjects were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lace: I have informal meetings from time to time with representatives of the Civil Service trade unions. Matters of mutual interest are discussed.

Civil Service (Functions)

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Minister for the Civil Service if he will establish a programme to acquaint Back-Bench hon. Members with the basic functioning of the Civil Service.

Mr. Lace: I have over the past year invited Back-Bench Members from all parties to a series of presentations in the Management and Personnel Office on management reform in the Civil Service, and I am willing to arrange further presentations if there is a demand for them. In January I published a report on the work of my Department entitled "The Challenge of Change in the Civil Service", and I am willing to publish further reports if that would be helpful.

ARTS

Museum Charges

Mr. Litherland asked the Minister for the Arts whether he will establish a unit within the Office of Arts and Libraries to monitor the effect of the introduction of museum charges on attendance.

Mr. Dubs asked the Minister for the Arts whether he will set up an inquiry into the effect of museum entrance charges on the level of admission.

Mr. Lace: I have no such plans.

Public Libraries

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Minister for the Arts if he will give the total number of books held in public libraries in England and Wales for 1960, 1965, 1970, 1975, 1980 and 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: No statistics are available for 1960. Approximate figures for England and Wales for subsequent years, as published by CIPFA, are as follows:

	million
1965	71·7
1970	97·7
1975	77·8
1980	118·0
1985	[1]121·2

[1] Figures adjusted to include data from some authorities which did not render returns to CIPFA.

Mr. Cohorn asked the Minister for the Arts what representations he has had about possible initiatives to increase the number of people using the public library service.

Mr. Luce: None.

Mr. Spencer asked the Minister for the Arts what estimate he has of the growth in service points in public libraries in the 10 year period to 1984-85.

Mr. Luce: Statistics published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy show an increase in the total number of service points in England from 9,720 in 1975 to 15,238 in 1985.

Libraries (Damage)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Minister for the Arts (1) if the British Library has completed its assessment of the damage to its collections inflicted by Miss Norma Hague and discovered in 1984;

(2) if he will list the individual and total value of the damage inflicted by Miss Norma Hague on the collections of (a) the British Library, (b) the Birmingham public library and (c) the Liverpool public library, including in each case the token value mentioned as their share of the damage on the charge when Miss Hague pleaded guilty and was convicted in November 1984.

Mr. Luce: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table for each region in Great Britain and Greater London, showing the totel numbers of people who, when interviewed for each of the last three labour force surveys, said that they would like a job if one were available, and the numbers of those in that category who (a) had not looked for work in the four weeks reference period and were not available to start work within two weeks and (b) had looked for work in the four-week reference period but were not available to start work within two weeks.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The figures supplied in the first three columns of the tables refer to the Labour Force Survey (LFS) figures for the number of people who said they would like a job for whatever reason. The remaining columns extract the figures requested for those people who were not available for work. Any analysis should take account of the fact that the figures in the first three columns include a further substantial number of people who said they were available for work but had not looked for work in the last four weeks.

As I made clear in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) on 17 March at column 445, the results of the LFS taken as a whole show that, according to internationally accepted definitions laid down by the ILO, fewer than 3 million people were unemployed in spring 1986, as in spring 1985.

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Paymaster General if he will give the official unemployment figures for May 1970, January 1974, March 1979, June 1983 and the latest available date.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. The table gives estimates of seasonally adjusted unemployment (excluding school leavers) consistent with the current monthly count. These statistics are available only from January 1971.

Weekly Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the median gross weekly earnings of full-time adult males and females at the latest available date and the upper and lower deciles as a percentage of the median; and if he will provide comparable figures for 1973 and 1979.

Mr. Lee: The most recent information relates to April 1986 and is published in table 30 of part B of the 1986 New Earnings Survey report. This table also includes figures for 1979. Figures for 1973 are published in table 30 of part B of the 1983 survey report. Copies of these reports are available in the Library.

Job Creation

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General what are the gross and net costs for each financial year since 1982-83 for the following special employment measures: (a) community programme, (b) enterprise allowance scheme, (c) young workers scheme, (d) community industry, (e) job release scheme and (f) job splitting scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The gross and estimated net costs are as follows:

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General what are the latest estimated percentage register effects on the unemployment count of the following special employment measures: (a) community programme, (b) enterprise allowance scheme, (c) young workers scheme, (d) community industry, (e) job release scheme and (f) job splitting scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is difficult, if not impossible, to calculate precisely the effect of the unemployment count on employment measures. The people engaged in (b) (c) (e) and (f) in the question are all engaged in ordinary work in the mainstream of the economy and have left the unemployment count in the same way as other unemployed people who find a job. The community programme (a) also provides real work at normal pay levels for long-term unemployed people. We make attempts to estimate how many of those concerned would have found jobs in any event without the schemes. Taking account of this and other factors, the best estimates we have of the so-called percentage effect of the schemes is as follows:

Moss Side Task Force

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Paymaster General (1) if he will make a statement on the progress made by his Department in the Moss Side task force area;

(2) if he will give details of actions taken by the Moss Side task force since it was established;

(3) if he will give details of the budget allocated to the Moss Side task force during 1986-87; how much will be spent by 31 March and on what projects; and what will happen to any unspent funds after 31 March;

(4) if he will give details of the budget to be allocated to the Moss Side task force during 1987-88;

(5) if he will give details of the Moss Side task force's relationship with the local community, including the extent to which its views are taken into account and influence decisions on how the task force's budget is allocated.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Wool Textile Industry

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General how many men and women are currently being trained in the wool textile industry and how many have been trained in each of the last 20 years.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 16 March 1987, c. 353]: The historic information requested is not available. Current training statistics in the wool textile industry are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Aid

Mr. Hind asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what was the total value of regional development grants and regional selective assistance grants awarded to businesses in the west Lancashire district in (a) 1984-85 and (b) 1985-86 respectively;

(2) how many regional development grants and regional selective assistance grants were awarded in the west Lancashire district council area in (a) 1984-85 and (b) 1985-86, respectively.

Mr. Giles Shaw: In 1984-85, seven regional development grant (2) and regional selective assistance awards totalling £266,000 were made in the west Lancashire district area. In 1985-86, 52 awards totalling £2,173,000 were made.

These figures do not include any awards made under regional development grant (1) scheme. Records of such awards were not maintained for individual areas.

Citizens Band Radio

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when holders of the citizens band radio licence will be able to use the frequencies of the common European CEPT system; and how long they will be able to use the existing 27MHz frequency after the launch of the CEPT system.

Mr. Pattie: I am pleased to be able to annouce that all holders of a current CB licence who possess appropriate equipment meeting my Department's new performance specification MPT 1333 will be able to use these frequencies from 1 September 1987.

I am also glad to reaffirm that the existing 27MHz frequencies will be in use for a long period. The existing CB United Kingdom specification (MPT 1320) will be reviewed during 1990 but, whether the outcome of the review, we will ensure that existing users get a good life out of their sets. One of the major factors we shall take into account in assessing the continuing need for the existing channels in 1990 will be the size of the licensed CB service. Irrespective of the outcome of this review, we will not be permitting conversions between two services. Converted sets will not meet the new specification and can give rise to interference. Sets must fully meet the new specification as this gives the best chance of European harmonisation of CB.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission (Undertakings)

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many complaints have been received by his Department about alleged breaches of undertakings given to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in respect of takeovers and purchases in each of the years 1970 to 1986;

(2) what remedies exist when undertakings given to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in relation to takeovers and purchases are not kept.

Mr. Howard: Any assurances which may be given to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission have no statutory underpinning. Under section 88(1) of the Fair Trading Act 1973, my right hon. Friend has powers, in the event of an adverse public interest finding on a non-newspaper merger reference, to ask the Director General of Fair Trading to seek undertakings from the parties to remedy the adverse effects identified. Such undertakings are given to Ministers.

The operation of undertakings given under the Fair Trading Act is kept under review by the Director General of Fair Trading, who has a duty, if it appears to him that an undertaking has not been or is not being fulfilled, to advise Ministers. Any complaints about breaches of undertakings would normally be drawn to the attention of the Director General of Fair Trading. The Department does not keep records on this basis. The Fair Trading Act also provides for the exercise of the order-making powers under certain circumstances to remedy adverse effects on the public interest identified by the MMC.

Airbus Industrie (Jobs)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish a table showing the location and the number of jobs at each location involved in Airbus Industrie A300, and A310, A320 production in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Pattie: On the information presently available, it is estimated that the number and location of jobs in the United Kingdom currently attributable to the Airbus Industrie A300, A310 and A320 programmes is set out in the following table. The figures are approximations only.

Area	Airframe manufacture (British Aerospace and sub-contractors)	Engine manufacture (Rolls-Royce, sub-contractors and suppliers)	Material and equipment supply
North/Northeast	600	—	100
Northwest	2,600	—	450

Home Counties	400	—	400
South West and South Wales	850	—	550
South of England	150	—	300
Total	4,600	1,200	2,800

[1] Jobs relating to Rolls-Royce's participation in International Aeroengine's V2500 engines for the A320.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the increase in the real rate of exchange against the principal currencies since the date on which the nominal rate for sterling fell to its lowest point against the deutschmark, together with his estimate of the increase in United Kingdom, German, American and Japanese export prices in dollar terms since the fourth quarter of 1976, having regard to changes in the nominal exchange rate and rates of inflation since the quarter for which the figures were last published in the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics."

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Finished Manufactures

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table for finished manufactures on the same basis as that provided for manufactures in his answer to the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Deakins) on 19 February, Official Report, column 750; and if he will provide similar figures of value and volume for trade with the European Economic Community.

Mr. Alan Clark: Those figures which are available follow. Estimates of volume of trade in finished manufactures by geographical area are not available.

The volume of United Kingdom exports and imports of finished manufactures

1972 = 100 OTS basis, seasonally adjusted

	Export volume	Import volume

Cellular Mobile Telephone Network

Mr. Mudd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if it remains Government policy to take a leading part in the development of a Pan-European cellular mobile telephone network; and if his Department will reserve all the frequencies earmarked for this purpose.

Mr. Pattie: The Government's commitment to the early introduction of a Pan-European digital cellular mobile telephone network remains firm. Once agreement on the standard has been reached we shall be looking for agreement for service to start in 1991. The European Commission has tabled a draft directive calling for the frequency bands 905-914 MHz and 950-959 MHz or equivalent parts of the bands 890-915 MHz and 935-960 MHz to be made available exclusively for the needs of a public Pan-European digital cellular mobile communication service by 1 January 1991. The United Kingdom supports this in principle and is willing to take the steps necessary to comply with this.

Hereford Bye Street Gate Sculptures

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will set out in the Official Report the evidence which has been submitted to the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art to sustain the claim that the Hereford Bye Street Gate sculptures have been exported and reimported to the United Kingdom in the last 50 years;

(2) if he will make it his policy to identify the intending purchasers of objects which are the subject of consideration by the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art;

(3) whether the Hereford Bye Street Gate sculptures are still located in the United Kingdom;

(4) when he was first advised of the sale of the Hereford Bye Street Gate sculptures; what has been the reason for the length of time which has elapsed since (a) for the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art to make a recommendation and (b) for him to reach a decision; and when he now expects to make his decision;

(5) if any export licence has been granted in respect of the Hereford Bye Street Gate sculptures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Fireworks

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will introduce legislation to prohibit unlicensed traders from selling fireworks and to ensure that unlicensed retailers are not supplied with fireworks by wholesalers;

(2) if he has any plans to improve the level of enforcement of the Fireworks Safety Regulations 1986: (a) relating to the release of information about holders of explosives licences from the fire authority and (b) in detecting unlicensed traders during the period when fireworks are sold to the public.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply, 26 March 1987, c. 242]: Under the Explosives Act 1875 a licence is required to store fireworks. This has the effect of requiring all retailers who sell fireworks to be licensed. Local authorities are required under the same Act to keep lists of retailers holding licences, which are available for inspection. They should also monitor retail outlets during the fireworks season.

I do not consider it necessary at present to introduce further legislation as unlicensed traders can already be prosecuted under the Explosives Act 1875.

The Fireworks (Safety) Regulations 1986 were introduced to deter shopkeepers from selling fireworks to the under-16s. They do not refer to the question of explosive licences.

SCOTLAND

Highlands and Islands (Employment)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of employment levels within the Highlands and Islands.

Mr. Lang: The numbers of employees in employment in the Highlands and Islands in September 1981 were:

	Number
Highland Region	72,600
Orkney	6,100
Shetland	10,900
Western Isles	8,200

These figures are from the 1981 census of employment; corresponding results from the 1984 census should be available later this year.

Prisoners (Health Statistics)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest available figure for the number of (a) AIDS sufferers, (b) HIV carriers and (c) hepatitis B carriers among the prison population in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: There are no AIDS sufferers among the prison population in Scotland at present.

No reliable figures for the numbers of carriers of HIV or hepatitis B are available. Blood tests can be taken only with the informed consent of inmates and it is not possible to estimate the numbers of symptomless carriers who may have been received into penal establishments. Figures for reported incidence of infection in penal establishments are collected on an annual basis and published in the annual reports "Prisons in Scotland". In 1985 there were 26 cases of infective jaundice (hepatitis B) reported compared with 55 cases in 1984. Reported figures for 1986 will be published in due course.

Fisheries Protection

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland why he has decided to replace the current arrangement of chartering an aircraft for fisheries patrols with a contract for operating another aircraft that his Department has acquired for this purpose.

Mr. John MacKay: Before implementing the Government decision to replace RAF Nimrods on fisheries surveillance by civilian aircraft an appraisal was undertaken to decide on the appropriate aircraft. Pending the outcome of those deliberations an interim solution, making substantial savings on the cost of Nimrod, was implemented using a Dornier 228. The longer term appraisal was completed in the autumn 1986 and it indicated that a Fokker F27-200 should be acquired for the task.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what price is being paid by his Department for the acquisition of a Fokker F27-200 aircraft for fisheries patrols; and from what source it is being purchased.

Mr. John MacKay: The Fokker F27-200 is being acquired from Nordic Oil Services Ltd, Edinburgh airport, at a cost of just under £3 million.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the cost to his department of the new arrangements for airborne fisheries patrols under the following headings: (a) depreciation and interest charges on the aircraft and radar equipment, respectively, (b) the costs of operating, and fuelling the aircraft and (c) costs of repairs and maintenance to the aircraft and the radar equipment, respectively.

Mr. John MacKay: The aircraft, including radar, will be depreciated in equal instalments of around £230,000 per annum over 10 years to an estimated residual value of £700,000. No interest charges apply in this transaction. It would not be appropriate to provide the estimated costs of operating and fuelling the aircraft nor the estimated costs of repairs and maintenance of aircraft and radar whilst the tenders regarding the operation are being evaluated and whilst discussions regarding a maintenance contract are at a critical stage.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a description of the Fokker F27-200 aircraft that he is acquiring for fisheries patrols including its age, any protective treatment to prevent corrosion when flying at low levels over the sea, its range and any other factors relevant to the use for this purpose.

Mr. John MacKay: The Fokker F27-200 was in scheduled airline service with Air UK until early 1987. It was built in October 1959 and has a remaining life of over 21,500 cycles (a cycle is from a take-off to a landing). It is anticipated that some 400 cycles per annum will be undertaken by the aircraft on fisheries surveillance. The aircraft is at present undergoing a major maintenance check during which time it will be extensively protected against corrosion. The endurance of the aircraft will be enhanced by the addition of pylon tanks and extra wing tanks, resulting in a total endurance of some 10½ hours. The aircraft will be fitted with Litton LTN 72R inertial navigation system and Litton LTN 211 VLF/Omega.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what radar equipment he proposes to install in the aircraft that he is acquiring for fisheries patrols; and how this equipment compares with the radar system used under the previous charter contract in terms of purchase and operating costs, suitability for detection of fishing vessels and suitability for detection of submarines.

Mr. John MacKay: The aircraft will be equipped with the Edinburgh-built Ferranti Seaspray mark III surveillance radar and will thus have the advantage of local maintenance back-up. The radar installed on the charter aircraft currently in use, is the US-built Bendix 1500. The technical assessment made by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland indicated that the more sophisticated Ferranti radar will have a better detection rate of fishing vessels in all sea states. The suitability or otherwise of the equipment to detect submarines was not a feature of the radar evaluation.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of alleged illegal fishing have been reported by his Department's airborne fisheries patrols since 1 September 1986; how many of those reports have been investigated; and how many prosecutions have been made as a result of those investigations.

Mr. John MacKay: Airborne fisheries patrols have reported six cases of alleged infringements, all of which have been investigated. One case is being considered for submission to the procurator fiscal and details of another case (involving a Dutch vessel) have been supplied to the Dutch authorities for them to consider legal action. In the remaining cases no further action is proposed.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the draft certificates of authorisation for the discharge of radioactive waste from Torness power station.

Mr. Ancram: I have arranged for copies of the draft certificates of authorisation and of the accompanying explanatory notes to be sent today to the hon. Member. Copies will also be placed in the Library.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when, and by what method, the decision by Fife health board to adopt option C as its policy in relation to acute bed provision in Fife was conveyed to his office.

Mr. John MacKay: The board's decision was initially conveyed to the Scottish Home and Health Department by telephone on 3 March when a meeting was arranged to consider the procedures to be adopted to implement the decision. The board has yet to make a formal submission for approval in principle.

Roads

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the major trunk road projects which have been started during 1986-87 and those which he expects to start in 1987-88.

Mr. Rifkind: The information is as follows:

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Diseases (Research)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 12 March, Official Report, column 301, with regard to former and current research programmes, if he will state (a) which wildlife vectors have been found to pass the diseases to farm animals, (b) which farm animals were involved, (c) what was the vehicle of infection in each case, (d) how many dairy farms were studied, what were the numbers of cattle in each farm, and what was the general level of hygiene of the farms and (e) in how many cases the diseases were passed to humans; and what was the vehicle of infection in each case.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There is very little evidence to indicate that wildlife vectors transmit diseases such as salmonellosis to farm animals but it has been established that badgers have infected cattle with tuberculosis. The results of the research programmes are available from published sources. I am arranging for a list of the relevant publications to be placed in the Library of the House.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Sir Peter Hordern asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will now extend the designations of environmentally sensitive area to the whole of the South Downs in West Sussex; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In his statement of 9 February announcing additional funding for further ESAs my right hon. Friend said that we would build on the existing short list from the Countryside Commission and Nature Conservancy Council. The western part of the south downs is on that short list and we shall therefore give careful consideration to the case for designating the area.

Agricultural Development and Advisory Service

Mr. Livsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans for further reductions in Agricultural Development Advisory Service beekeeping specialists; and if he will make a statement on the future funding of his Ministry's free diagnostic disease service.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There are no plans to reduce the number of Agricultural Development and Advisory Service beekeeping specialists. Charging will be introduced on 30 March for certain diagnostic services to beekeepers, details of which have been sent to the Beekeeping associations, but diagnosis of notifiable diseases of bees, namely American Foul Brood, European Foul Brood and Varroasis, will continue to be carried out free of charge.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Maternity Payments

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in Putney claimed the maternity grant in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the form requested. But in the 12 months ending 31 December 1986, 1120 claims for maternity grant were made at the Wandsworth local office of the Department which covers Putney, although the boundaries are not conterminous.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in Welwyn and Hatfield claimed the maternity grant in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the form requested. But in the 12 months ending 31 December 1986, the following numbers of claims to maternity grant were made at the Department's local offices which cover the constituency, although their boundaries are not conterminous:

	Number
Hatfield	1,008
Hertford	1,339
St. Albans	1,509

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in Battersea claimed the maternity grant in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the form requested. But in the 12 months ending 31 December 1986, the following numbers of claims to maternity grant were made at the Department's offices which cover the Battersea constituency, although the boundaries are not conterminous:

	Number
Balham	[1]
Battersea	[1]
Wandsworth	1,120

[1] Claims for these offices are dealt with at Broadstairs out-station. A total of 5,258 claims were dealt with at that office but this total includes claims proper to other offices.

Benefits

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social services if he will provide figures for the number of people dependent on social security benefits, broken down by category of benefit and age group, in the constituencies of Southwark and Bermondsey, Peckham and Dulwich.

Mr. Lyell: I regret that it is not possible to provide all the information requested.

The constituencies of Southwark and Bermondsey, Peckham and Dulwich are covered by the Department's local office as follows:

Constituency	Local offices
Southwark and Bermondsey	Southwark, Kennington Park, Camberwell and Greenwich Park
Peckham	Peckham, Camberwell and Kennington Park
Dulwich	Peckham, Brixton and Crystal Palace

The boundaries of these offices are not conterminous with those of the constituencies they cover.

The numbers of people receiving locally administered social security benefits from the offices covering these constituencies are:

	Southwark and Bermondsey	Peckham	Dulwich
Sickness and Invalidity Benefit[1]	3,875	3,295	5,285
Maternity Allowance[1]	553	330	743
Severe Disablement Allowance[1]	478	445	787
Supplementary Benefit[2]	52,429	35,122	35,569

[1] Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action on 10 March 1987.
[2] Source: 100 per cent. of cases in action on 10 February 1987.

These constituencies are covered for unemployment benefit purposes by the following unemployment benefit offices:

Constituency	Unemployment benefit offices [1]
Southwark and Bermondsey	Borough and Bermondsey
Peckham	Camberwell 'A' and Camberwell 'B'
Dulwich	Forest Hill, Camberwell 'A' and Camberwell 'B'

The boundaries of offices covering the constituencies of Peckham and Dulwich are not conterminous with those of the constituencies.

The number of people receiving unemployment benefit from the offices covering these constituencies, at 13 November 1986, the latest available figures, was:

Constituency	Unemployment benefit recipients
Southwark and Bermondsey	1,088
Peckham	1,721
Dulwich	2,492

Source: 100 per cent. count of claims in payment.

Housing benefit is administered in all these constituencies by the London borough of Southwark. In April 1986 — the latest information available — there were an estimated 36,610 recipients of housing benefit in Southwark. This figure is subject to revision.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if, following the decision of the social security commissioner in the case of Joseph Hugh Foster of Birmingham made on 20 February, he will arrange for local offices to review all cases of unemployed persons having supplementary benefit reduced because such persons could receive an early reduced pension from a former employer;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to compensate for loss of pension those unemployed persons taking a reduced early pension in consequence of the supplementary benefit notional resource regulations; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many submissions have been made to his headquarters from local offices in respect of deductions in supplementary benefit to unemployed persons who have a choice of a reduced early pension from a former employer;

(4) what is his estimate of the number of unemployed persons in receipt of supplementary benefit, whose benefit is reduced because they have an entitlement to an early reduced pension from a former employer.

Mr. Lyell: I understand that the Chief Adjudication Officer is considering the decision of the social security commissioner in the case of Mr. Joseph Hugh Foster of Birmingham, and I shall let the hon. Member have a further reply when that has been completed. Information is not available on the number of unemployed persons whose supplementary benefit is reduced because they have an entitlement to an early reduced pension from a former employer. Neither our headquarters nor the Chief Adjudication Office have received any submissions on this subject since my predecessor's replies to the hon. Member on 28 October 1985 at column 381 and 13 January 1986 at column 497.

West Middlesex Hospital

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure that the West Middlesex hospital does not refuse emergency admissions from the London ambulance service.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

NHS Staff (Pay)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the present pay scales for National Health Service nursing officers, ward sisters and radiographers.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Social Security Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing on the same basis as table 40.13 of "Social Security Statistics 1985" the average amount paid per person insured under each heading in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: The information is as follows:

Average (£) amounts of employees' NI contributions paid per person insured in the 1983-84 tax year, United Kingdom

	Total	Men	Married women	Single, widowed, divorced women
Class 1 standard rate	450·70	521·70	307·80	324·40

Note: All statistics rounded to nearest 10 pence.

[1] Includes class 3 contributions only. Mixtures of class 3 contributions and other contributions types are analysed according to the other contributions types.

Health Education Council

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons who worked for the Health Education Council have resigned, or given notice of resignation, since Her Majesty's Government made clear their intention to abolish the Health Education Council; what positions they held; and what percentage they represent of staff at each occupational grade.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Health Education Authority

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy that the selection of work, preparation of surveys and publication of results by the new Health Education Authority will be totally independent and not subject in any way to ministerial or official interference.

Mr. Newton: The new Health Education Authority will work within the framework of ministerial accountability to Parliament and of a policy to increase the vigour and effectiveness of action throughout the NHS to prevent illness and promote good health. It is not however expected to acquiesce in its employees' commissioning and publishing major documents without properly involving or informing the chairman and members of the authority.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Dr. Owen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients are on the hospital waiting lists in each of Devon's four district health authorities, in each of the categories of patient for which this information is available.

Mr. Newton: For the latest centrally available information I refer the right hon. Member to "Hospital In-Patient Waiting List, England at 30 September 1986, National Regional and District Summaries," copies of which have been placed in the Library. For more recent figures he may wish to write to the chairmen of the district health authorities in Devon.

Nurses (Pay)

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what assessment he has made of the financial position of nurses in the National Health Service, with particular regard to their ability, at current pay levels, to obtain suitable accommodation; what representations he has received on this subject from nurses in Berkshire; what discussions he has had with the nurses and midwives negotiating bodies; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will expedite his consideration of the recommendations of the review body on nurses' pay; if he will make it his policy, in reaching his conclusions on those recommendations, to allow health authorities sufficient flexibility to enable them to implement a higher pay increase in areas where recruitment and retention is especially difficult; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Personal Taxation

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the next financial year information concerning wife's earned income allowance on the same basis as given in his reply of 24 July 1986, Official Report, column 467.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Benefits

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the receipts in 1987-88 from the taxation of unemployment benefit and all supplementary benefits; and what is his estimate of the gross and net cost of a 10 per cent. increase in benefit in each case.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Pension Funds

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will introduce legislation to remove tax privileges from all pension funds which have experienced a reduction in the employer's contribution; and if he will provide an estimate of the likely saving in tax on the income of such funds at the standard rate.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No. The information on which to base such an estimate is not available.

Debt Service Payments

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list in the Official Report the level of debt service payments to the United Kingdom in cash terms and as a proportion of the total to the world for both (a) the 29 poorest countries in Africa and (b) all African nations for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. MacGregor: The information is not available.

Mortgage Interest Payments

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the number of cases in which tax relief will be given through MIRAS or otherwise on mortgage interest payments in the next financial year, together with (a) the estimated cost to the Exchequer and (b) the number of recipients of working age and their distribution by personal category gross and by range of gross income together with the average amount of relief given.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 23 March 1987, c. 39-40]: Information is in the table. Following the introduction of MIRAS in April 1983, it is no longer possible to estimate the distribution of mortgage interest relief from tax records (except for relief on mortgages outside the scope of MIRAS and relief given at rates in excess of the basic rate). The estimates in the table are based on projections of the family expenditure survey for 1985 and the 1984-85 survey of personal incomes, but the sample sizes do not permit reliable estimates to be made in all the detail requested. Estimates are subject to revision.

[1] Single persons and married couples.
[2] Including about 500,000 non-taxpayers.
[3] Assuming interest rates of 12·25 per cent. in April 1987 and 11·25 per cent. from May 1987.

Self-Employed Persons (Taxation)

Ms. Clare Short asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the number of tax units where the main source of income is self-employment income in each year since 1983-84.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 25 March 1987, c. 215]: The number of tax units (single people or married couples) where the main source (usually the largest source) of income was self-employment income was about 2·10 million in 1983-84 and 2·26 million in 1984-85, the latest year for which information is available.

Stamp Duty

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the amount of stamp duty payable on share transactions (a) since deregulation in the stock markets and (b) in a comparable period the previous year; and what is the implied rate at which the share capital of the listed companies is being turned over annually.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 23 March 1987, c. 39]: Receipts of stamp duty and stamp duty reserve tax on share transactions in the period from 27 October to the end of February were:

	£ million
1985-86	220
1986-87	260

The implied rates of turnover of the ordinary share capital of United Kingdom registered companies indicated by these figures are 9 per cent. and 16·2 per cent. respectively.

Taxation

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the estimated loss of (a) income tax, (b) higher rate tax and (c) capital gains tax in the next financial year on, respectively, life assurance premiums, retirement annuity premiums and lump-sum payments to pensioners, distinguishing between non-contributory schemes which provide a maximum pension of 50 per cent. of eligible earnings and other schemes and the investment income of occupational pension schemes, distinguishing between employees and the self-employed.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 23 March 1987, c. 40]: The available estimates of the direct revenue cost in respect of income ax are as follows:

	Estimated direct revenue cost 1987-88 £ million
Life assurance premium relief	510
Retirement annuity premium relief	410
—(Of which, relief at the excess of rates above the basic rate	130)
Relief on lump sum payments to pensioners (assuming relief at the basic rate)	1,100
Relief on investment income of occupational pension funds (assuming relief at the basic rate)	4,000

There are no capital gains tax implications of life assurance premium relief, retirement annuity premium relief or lump sum payments to pensioners, and no estimate of the cost of exempting capital gains made by pension funds is available.

The estimated cost of life assurance premium relief given above includes a cost of about £100 million in respect of the self-employed and that for retirement annuity premium relief includes a cost of about £330 million.

The requested disaggregation by type of scheme is not available.

Personal Income (Rates and Taxation)

Mr. Straw asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing (a) the proportion in percentage terms, (b) the amount in current prices and (c) the amount in constant 1985-86 prices of personal income taken by taxation and rates for the year 1986-87, taking account of any changes announced in his Budget statement and any previously announced changes, and for each of the years 1978-79, 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87 for each level of average earnings, each category of taxpayer, and each category of taxation and rates, in the manner of the answers of 3 April 1985, Official Report, column 676, 2 July 1985, Official Report, column 112 and of 26 March 1986, Official Report, column 530.

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update to 1987-88 the information on tax and national insurance contributions as a proportion of gross earnings provided in his reply of 19 February to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher), Official Report, column 829; and if he will provide the same information for a married man with an earning wife.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his replies, 23 and 25 March 1987, c. 42-216]: I understand that the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) wishes the figures in constant 1986-87 prices with rates for the year 1987-88. The information is in the following tables.

50 per cent. of average male earnings (£113·65 a week in 1987-88).

Notes to Tables

Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the tax units have no other tax reliefs apart from the standard allowances. Earners, including working wives, are assumed to pay class 1 National Insurance contributions at the contracted in rate. The figures for National Insurance contributions are financial year averages.

2. Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. The levels of average earnings in each year are as follows:

	£ per week
1978-79	92·80
1979-80	109·30
1980-81	131·40
1981-82	145·90
1982-83	157·40
1983-84	171·00

	£ per week
1984-85	185·00
1985-86	198·50
1986-87	[1]213·40
1987-88	[2]227·30

[1] Assuming growth of 7½ per cent. on 1985-86.
[2] Assuming growth of 6¼ per cent. on 1986-87.

3. The two-earner married couple is assumed to have joint earnings of the various multiples of average earnings. In calculating disposable income it is assumed that the joint earnings are split between husband and wife in the ratio 60:40.

4. For the married couple with two children, the percentage column expresses taxes etc as percentages of gross earnings plus child benefit. For this purpose, financial year averages are used for child benefit.

5. The estimates of indirect taxes are derived from the 1985 Family Expenditure Survey and are based on the illustrative assumption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved. Estimates cannot reliably be made outside the income range for which figures are shown. There are also quite wide variations in spending patterns between households with similar incomes and compositions and, because of sampling variation, there can be substantial differences between the estimates obtained from different Family Expenditure Surveys.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 30 March 1987

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Attorney-General if he will make the gathering of information on ethnic origins compulsory, and publish the percentage of entrants to the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Law Officers Department who failed to respond to the ethnic origins questionnaire.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 24 March by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, at column 98, when she affirmed that there are no plans at present to make the ethnic surveys compulsory and that the results of the survey will be published.

Information on response rates in the existing new entrant surveys is not readily available.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

County Palatine

Mr. Pike asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what official duties he undertook, in what places, in the course of his last visit to the County Palatine.

Mr. Tebbit: My most recent visit to the County Palatine was on 10 March, when I attended the annual lunch of the Central and West Lancashire chamber of commerce at the Imperial hotel, Blackpool.

PRIME MINISTER

Ysbyty Gwynedd, Bangor

Mr. Wigley asked the Prime Minister on what date she received an invitation to open Ysbyty Gwynedd at Bangor; and on what date she replied to that invitation.

The Prime Minister: The programme for my visit to north Wales was finalised, in the usual way, shortly before the visit took place.

AIDS-infected Children

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on co-ordination at ministerial level between the Department of Health and Social Security and the Department of Education and Science concerning possible changes to the policy of allowing AIDS-infected children to attend school without informing the parents of other children.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Education and Science and the Secretary of State for Social Services keep in close touch about policy issues concerned with AIDS and young people. Government policy remains as stated in the guidance issued last year by the Department of Education and Science and the Welsh Office: that children infected with the virus have a right to confidentiality about their condition if they and their parents so choose. If such information is disclosed it should be strictly confined to those within the school who need to know. There is no risk of the AIDS virus being transmitted through normal social contact in a school setting, provided that sensible hygiene precautions are observed.

United States Assistant Secretary of State (Meeting)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Prime Minister on what dates she met United States Assistant Secretary of State Eliot Abrams during 1986; and what was discussed.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the reply that I gave to the hon. Gentleman on 4 March at column 598.

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

Council of Ministers

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: The usual forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. At present, four meetings of the Council of Ministers are planned for April.

The Consumer Affairs Council on 7 April is expected to consider a proposed directive on dangerous imitations of consumer products and a progress report on the proposed safety of toys directive.

The Internal Market Council will meet on 7 April to discuss a number of measures in the rolling action programme for the completion of the internal market.

The Foreign Affairs Council will meet from 26 to 27 April. It will discuss the ex novo review of the future financing arrangements for the Community; consider a draft negotiating mandate for an EC/Hungary trade and economic agreement; the next EC/Algeria Cooperation Council to be held under the terms of the EC/Algeria cooperation agreement; and the guidelines for the provision of EC aid to Asian and Latin American countries. Following its brief discussion in March, the Council will have a fuller discussion of the current climate in EC/US relations.

The Agriculture Council is expected to meet on 27/28 April, and provided there is no earlier agreement, is likely to continue its discussions on the 1987 price-fixing proposals, which will include reviews of the green currency system and the oils and fats régime.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Turks and Caicos Islands

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to publish for consultation the report of the constitutional commission on the Turks and Caicos Islands chaired by Sir Roy Marshall before reaching a final decision.

Mr. Eggar: We intend shortly to make public the report of the constitutional commission on the Turks and Caicos Islands.

Hong Kong

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer on 2 December 1986, Official Report, column 542, to the hon. Member for Stockton, North on the responsibilities of Her Majesty's Government for the people of Hong Kong, whether contingency plans exist in the event of a nuclear accident at the Daya bay nuclear power station necessitating evacuation for refuge in the United Kingdom for citizens of Hong Kong seeking refuge.

Mr. Renton: The Hong Kong Government are preparing plans to make all possible provision for ensuring the safety of Hong Kong people in the event of an accident at the nuclear power station now under construction at Daya bay. The Hong Kong Government intend to complete these plans well before the station is commissioned in 1992.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer on 2 December 1986, Official Report, column 542, to the hon. Member for Stockton, North on the responsibilities of Her Majesty's Government for the people of Hong Kong, if he will provide an estimate of how much money Britain has earned from Hong Kong over the last decade.

Mr. Renton: Commercial and financial transactions between Britain and Hong Kong are complex and their net value cannot readily be estimated. Although Hong Kong is, after Japan, the UK's second largest export market in the Far East, for many years, the visible trade balance has been in Hong Kong's favour. No reliable estimate of capital flows is available.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government will now provide a contingency fund for assistance to businesses in Hong Kong in the event of an accident at Daya bay nuclear power plant; and whether his Department has made any estimate of the likely cost of a worst case nuclear accident at Daya bay under adverse meteorological conditions.

Mr. Renton: Any question of assistance to businesses in Hong Kong is a matter for the Hong Kong Government. The Hong Kong Government have requested their consultants, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, to prepare an accident assessment report on the Daya bay power station. Once this report has been received and examined, the Hong Kong Government will consider the possible implications for Hong Kong of any accident at the Daya bay plant.

AIDS

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether he has any plans to arrange for staff of his Department to be screened for antibodies to human immunodeficiency virus;

(2) whether any current or former staff of his Department have been found to have developed AIDS or antibodies to human immunodeficiency virus;

(3) what steps he has taken to ensure that staff of his Department are warned about those homosexual and other activities which are deemed to involve a high risk of AIDS infection.

Mr. Eggar: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Eliot Abrams

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he or any of his officials met United States Assistant Secretary of State Eliot Abrams in London during 1986; and on what dates.

Mr. Eggar: We maintain a regular dialogue at all levels with members of the United States Administration on a wide range of international issues.

Blowpipe Missiles

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken to investigate allegations in the Tower commission report that representatives of Short Bros. held discussions with United States Government officials regarding supplying Blowpipe missiles to the Contra forces.

Mr. Eggar: There is no evidence to suggest that Short Brothers has acted in breach of United Kingdom law. Blowpipe has not been supplied to the Contras. The question of an investigation does not arise.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Burglaries

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the number of domestic burglaries was in (a) 1979 and (b) 1986.

Mr. Mellor: Police in England and Wales recorded 252,800 burglaries in dwellings in 1979 and 506,000 in 1986. These statistics are published annually in the Command Paper "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", and, for 1986, in the Home Office statistical bulletin 4/87. Results from crime surveys imply that much of this increase in recorded offences of burglaries in dwellings was due to a rise in the proportion of such offences being reported to the police. This rise in reporting is discussed in chapter 2 of the 1984 Command Paper (Cmnd. 9621: paras 2.6 to 2.13).

Life Sentences

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time served by those who have completed their sentence of life imprisonment for murder.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Langbaurgh (Mr. Holt) on 17 March at columns 451-54.

Harmondsworth Detention Centre

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost per inmate of running the Harmondsworth detention centre by Securicor Services Ltd.; and what is the cost of running comparable services with prison officers.

Mr. Waddington: The estimated daily cost of detaining a person in immigration service detention centres, including Harmondsworth, is £115. This figure includes transport, escort and running costs, and the cost of employing staff from Securicor Ltd. The cost per day of detaining a person held under the Immigration Act 1971 in a prison department establishment, though not entirely comparable, is estimated at £34.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many extra police officers have been released for street duty as a result of the reorganisation of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that by April 1988 some 218 police officers will be released for operational duties as a result of the force reorganisation. It is not possible to say how many of these will be allocated to street duty.

Chief Superintendent Kenneth John Etheridge

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the resignation of Chief Superintendent Kenneth John Etheridge and his subsequent appointment with Lonhro plc.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that Chief Superintendent Etheridge retired on 31 August 1977. The subsequent employment of any officer who has left the Metropolitan police is a matter for the individual concerned.

Prisoners (Remand Costs)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the daily cost of keeping a prisoner on remand in a police cell in (a) London and (b) elsewhere.

Mr. Mellor: The average cost per prisoner per night of prisoners held in police cells in the Metropolitan police district is currently about £120.

The cost represents actual expenditure by the police in staff, accommodation and services, and is determined by various factors, in particular the number of prisoners and the number of locations at which they are held.

The cost of prisoners held by other police forces varies considerably according to circumstancies. Comprehensive figures could only be produced at disproportionate cost.

AIDS

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he has any plans to arrange for staff of his Department to be screened for antibodies to human immunodeficiency virus;

(2) whether any current or former staff of his Department have been found to have developed AIDS or antibodies to HIV;

(3) what steps he has taken to ensure that staff of his Department are warned about those homosexual and other activities which are deemed to involve a high risk of AIDS infection.

Mr. Hurd: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Bail

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to the answer of 25 March to the hon. Member for Leicester, East, he will take steps to collect centrally the statistics of the occasions in the last five years on which a person on bail to which the police had objected committed offences of (a) murder and (b) rape.

Mr. Mellor: Retrospective studies of this type would not be feasible but we are considering the possibility of initiating studies to obtain information of the kind requested in future.

Murder and Rape

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases in the past 20 years people who have already been convicted of (a) murder and (b) rape on one occasion have been convicted of a similar offence committed after the first conviction.

Mr. Mellor: In the past 20 years (including provisional information for 1986 and 1987) seven persons already convicted of murder in England and Wales have been convicted of a further murder committed after the first conviction, including one person whose second murder was committed in Scotland, and one in Northern Ireland. Two of the later murders were committed in prison and five while the offender was out of prison on licence. In addition, one murder was committed by a person who was on bail for a separate murder for which he was also subsequently convicted. Corresponding information for rape is not available.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Sizes

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, further to his answer of 15 January, Official Report, column 260, he will make available the evidence derived from curriculum modelling and school inspections upon which were based the indications of size thresholds for schools in the White Paper, "Better Schools."

Mr. Dunn: Further information is provided in a circular expected to be issued shortly.

AIDS

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether he has any plans to arrange for staff of his Department to be screened for antibodies to human immunodeficiency virus;

(2) whether any current or former staff of his Department have been found to have developed AIDS or antibodies to HIV;

(3) what steps he has taken to ensure that staff of his Department are warned about those homosexual and other activities which are deemed to involve a high risk of AIDS infection.

Mrs. Rumbold: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Teachers (Ealing)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will give directions under section 99 of the Education Act 1944 to ensure that teachers in the London borough of Ealing receive their monthly remuneration at the end of March; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

School Facilities

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what financial incentives he has offered local education authorities to assist them in opening up school educational facilities to a wider range of students;

(2) what financial assistance he has offered local education authorities attempting to extend the community use of schools.

Mr. Dunn: It is for local education authorities to consider what resources, within the total available to them, can be allocated for this purpose.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish figures indicating what funds are presently committed to initiatives helping schools to broaden their (a) curricula and (b) facilities to make them more generally accessible to their local communities.

Mr. Dunn: These are matters for LEAs themselves to take a view upon in the light of the resources available to them. My right hon. Friend is not therefore in a position to publish figures showing the level of funds committed.

School Rolls (Kirklees)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what correspondence he has had with Kirklees metropolitan borough council local education authority regarding falling school rolls and possible local school closures.

Mr. Dunn: None, since my right hon. Friend announced his decisions last year on a number of proposals under sections 12 and 15 of the Education Act 1980.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has had with Kirklees local education authority on falling school rolls and the possible closure of schools.

Mr. Dunn: None since I met repesentatives of the LEA on 26 March 1986 to hear their representations about four proposals then before my right hon. Friend.

School Maintenance (Rotherham)

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of the sums requested to bring all school buildings in the metropolitan borough of Rotherham into satisfactory condition; and what assessment he has made of the cost of such maintenance in one year's time.

Mr. Dunn: Such assessments are a matter for the Rotherham local education authority.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid Programme

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total value in constant prices of all aid flows from Her Majesty's Government to developing countries since 1960.

Mr. Chris Patten: Gross public expenditure on overseas aid at constant 1985 prices for 1961-1985 was as follows:

	£ million
1961	1,277
1962	1,198
1963	1,174
1964	1,339
1965	1,302
1966	1,350
1967	1,285
1968	1,248
1969	1,178
1970	1,142
1971	1,328
1972	1,246
1973	1,223
1974	1,302
1975	1,266
1976	1,333
1977	1,302
1978	1,438
1979	1,570
1980	1,347
1981	1,480
1982	1,259
1983	1,297
1984	1,393
1985	1,317

Statistics for 1960 are not available.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in the Official Report the total aid flows from the United Kingdom, in cash terms and as a percentage of the world total for both (a) the 29 poorest countries in Africa; and (b) all African nations for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Chris Patten: In 1985, Britain's gross public expenditure on aid through bilateral and multilateral channels to the 29 poorest countries in Africa totalled some £380 million, and to all the African countries amounted to some £570 million.

Comparable figures for total aid flows are not available on a public expenditure basis. The OECD estimates total gross official development assistance in 1985 to have been $7·8 billion to the 29 poorest and about $13·6 billion to all African countries.

Drugs

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what priority his Department gives to tackling drug manufacture and abuse in developing countries as part of their overall strategy for development.

Mr. Chris Patten: We recognise the importance of countries taking measures against drug manufacture and abuse as part of their development strategy, and we are ready to assist where appropriate, as for example in the Caribbean and Pakistan. I would refer the hon. Member to the recent report on drugs and development produced by the development assistance committee of the OECD, a copy of which I have placed in the Library.

Nicaragua

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial assistance Her Majesty's Government provide for the Government of Nicaragua.

Mr. Chris Patten: There is no regular programme of financial assistance to the Nicaraguan Government. However, in 1986 we provided £82,500 in financial assistance to Nicaragua, for displaced persons, through Christian Aid. In addition, we co-finance small development projects with British voluntary agencies and contribute to humanitarian relief work in central America, including Nicaragua. Nicaragua also benefits from European Community aid to the region, to which Britain makes a substantial contribution.

AIDS

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he has made to the World Health Organisation's call for further funding for its AIDS programme following the visit to him on 24 March of Dr. Jonathan Mann, the director in charge of this programme.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have told Dr. Mann that, subject to parliamentary approval, Britain intends to contribute £3 million in the financial year 1987-88 to the World Health Organisation's special programme on AIDS. This contribution represents about 12 per cent. of the estimated financial requirements of the special programme in 1987.

Tropical Forests

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration has been given towards the creation of a special tropical forest fund to which the timber industry, development aid agencies and Governments in the north would contribute, to be used for large-scale regeneration projects in degraded tropical forests for creating forest areas of biological importance so as to conserve their genetic resources.

Mr. Chris Patten: Governments and the international tropical timber industry subscribe to the international tropical timber agreement, which embraces both producing and consuming nations. It aims to promote policies for the sustainable utilisation and conservation of tropical forests. Concessional aid finance for this purpose is already available through resources co-ordinated under the Food and Agriculture Organisation's tropical forestry action plan.

WALES

Museums (Visitors)

98. Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of the number of people visiting museums in Wales.

99. Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of the number of people visiting museums in south Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is not available in the form requested.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make the gathering of information on ethnic origins compulsory, and publish the percentage of entrants to his Department who failed to respond to the ethnic origins questionnaire.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Surveys of the ethnic origin of new entrants to my Department have been carried out in agreement with the Council of Civil Service Unions, on the basis of voluntary self-classification. There are no plans at present to change to a compulsory system. However, the Civil Service and the Council of Civil Service Unions are keen to improve the data base, and are discussing practical ways in which this can be done.

The response rate in the existing new entrant survey in my Department is 100 per cent.

Dairy Industry

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of jobs which will be lost (a) directly and (b) indirectly, in the dairy industry in Wales, as a result of the recently announced cutbacks.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have made no such estimates. The effects of the milk quota cutbacks will differ from farm to farm according to the decisions taken by individual farmers. As far as the manufacturing sector is concerned, the extent of possible redundancies will depend on a variety of factors, including the industry's response to changes in the market.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales why the Welsh Office is rejecting applications for assistance from public bodies in Wales for translation and printing literature in the Welsh language, of a type for which help has been forthcoming in the past; and if he will make a statement on the level of resources available for the Welsh Office's translation unit.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Office has not changed its policy of helping public bodies in Wales with translation into the Welsh language. It has always considered each case on its merits while giving priority to the work of the Welsh Office and to publications for other Government Departments. The level of resources to do this is determined by current demands on the translation unit.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state the total number of representations he has received concerning a new Welsh Language Act since launching his consultation exercise last autumn; and how many of these representations came from (a) bodies whom he had invited to respond, (b) councils, bodies, groups and associations who had not been directly approached by him and (c) individuals.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: To date, 1,300 representations have been received. Of those originally invited to comment, 115 have so far responded. A detailed analysis by source of all other representations will be undertaken after 31 March.

Gwynedd DHA

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he is satisfied, in the light of last year's report by the Health Advisory Service on psychiatric care in Gwynedd, that the Gwynedd health authority has adequate funds to undertake its responsibilities in this field.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I am satisfied that the total recurring revenue resources made available to Gwynedd DHA, which have risen in the period 1978-79 to 1987-88 by 39 per cent. in real terms, are generally adequate to enable it to provide appropriate services in all sectors. We are currently considering proposals from DHAs for additional central financial support for developments which could make a significant contribution to the enhancement of psychiatric services and expect to announce a decision shortly.

AIDS

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) whether he has any plans to arrange for staff of his Department to be screened for antibodies to human immunodeficiency virus;

(2) whether any current or former staff of his Department have been found to have developed AIDS or antibodies to human immunodeficiency virus;

(3) what steps he has taken to ensure that staff of his Department are warned about those homosexual and other activities which are deemed to involve a high risk of AIDS infection.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I shall reply as soon as possible.

EMPLOYMENT

Tourism (Essex)

Mr. Amess asked the Paymaster General what effect in terms of job creation is expected from the £5 million more to be allocated in the field of tourism in (a) Essex and (b) Basildon.

Mr. Trippier: The recently announced additional £5 million for Government support for tourism represented the total increase in Government funds to be made available to the English tourist board and the British Tourist Authority in 1987-88 compared with the current financial year. About half this increase has been allocated to the scheme of selective financial assistance to tourism projects operated by the ETB under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969. The balance will be used mainly to enhance the marketing activities of the ETB and the BTA.

It is not possible to say what effect these increases in funding will have on job creation in Essex or in Basildon. However, tourism in the area should benefit indirectly from the effects of increased marketing activity. Of more direct potential benefit to job creation in the area is the section 4 scheme. The ETB is always ready to consider applications from tourism operators and developers for support for projects which meet the scheme's criteria.

Occupational Lung Cancer

Mr. Blair asked the Paymaster General what investigations are under way to establish the risk of lung cancer in the manufacture of those chromate chemicals other than zinc, calcium and strontium chromates recently the subject of the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council report on occupational lung cancer.

Mr. Trippier: The Industrial Injuries Advisory Council in its review considered the evidence for lung cancer risk in the manufacture of chromates was limited to the zinc, calcium and strontium compounds. The Health and Safety Executive is not carrying out or funding research on other chromates.

Tourism (London)

Mr. Greenway asked the Paymaster General what is his policy towards the level of hotel provision in London in the light of the report "Tourism in London: Resident Opinion Survey", by the London Tourist Board and Convention Bureau, a copy of which has been forwarded to him.

Mr. Trippier: The Government recognise that hotel capacity in London needs to increase if the United Kingdom is to continue to benefit fully from the growth in world tourism predicted over the next few years. A large number of respondents to the resident opinion survey agreed that tourism made a positive contribution to amenities and employment in London and that there was a need to cater effectively for the requirements of visitors. The survey's findings are being taken into account by the London tourism forum which is currently co-ordinating a tourism strategy for London.

Scotland (Labour Statistics)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Paymaster General how many people have been employed in the administrative regions of Scotland in each year since 1980 in (a) the Health and Safety Executive and (b) Her Majesty's factory inspectorate.

Mr. Trippier: The number of people employed in Scotland in each year since 1980 in (a) the Health and Safety Executive (including Her Majesty's factory inspectorate) and (b) Her Majesty's factory inspectorate are:

	HSE	Factory inspectorate[1]
[2]1980	232	148

Figures by administrative region could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Factory Inspectorate (Scotland)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Paymaster General what have been the additional areas of enforcement responsibility in Scotland taken by the factory inspectorate since 1979.

Mr. Trippier: The main additional areas of enforcement responsibility taken by Her Majesty's factory inspectorate since 1979 are as follows:

1981
The Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations.
The Health and Safety (Dangerous Pathogens) Regulations.
The Control of Lead at Work Regulations.
The Diving Operations at Work Regulations.
1982
The Dangerous Substances (Conveyance by Road in Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations.
The Notification of New Substances Regulations.
1983
The Notification of Installations Handling Hazardous Substances Regulations.
1984
The Asbestos (Licensing) Regulations.
The Classification, Packaging and Labelling of Dangerous Substances Regulations.
The Gas Safety (Installation and Use) Regulations.
1985
The Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations.
1986
The Asbestos (Prohibitions) Regulations.
The Ionising Radiations Regulations.
The Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Substances Regulations.

Major Injuries (Scottish Manufacturing Industry)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Paymaster General how many fatal and major injuries there have been at work in manufacturing industry in each year since 1981 by administrative region of Scotland.

Mr. Trippier: The reported number of injuries at work are as follows:

Injuries in manufacturing industry in Scotland, reported to Her Majesty's factory inspectorate

	Fatal	Major
1981	21	463
1982	19	428
1983	20	374

[1] Provisional.

I regret that figures for each region of Scotland are not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. Figures for 1986 onwards are not yet available.

Training Schemes

Mrs. Peacock asked the Paymaster General how many people in Batley and Spen have benefited from the training for enterprise scheme since its inception; and if he will provide the same information for the wider opportunities training programme.

Mr. Trippier: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the number of people assisted under the training for enterprise scheme and the wider opportunities training programme for the Manpower Services Commission's Bradford Calderdale and Kirklees vocational education and training group area are as follows:

Financial year	Training for Enterprise	Wider Opportunities
1984-85	62	541
1985-86	383	599
1986-87[1]	793	941

[1] Figures are for the period 1 April 1986 to 28 February 1987.

Employment Transfer Scheme

Mrs. Peacock asked the Paymaster General how many people have benefited from the employment transfer scheme; if he has any information about the average distances involved in the transfer of such people; and if he will provide the same information for the free forward fare scheme.

Mr. John Lee: During the year ended 31 March 1986, 3,300 unemployed people were helped by the employment transfer scheme and a further 11,350 received free forward fares to enable them to take up new jobs. I regret that we have no information on the average distances of the moves under either of the schemes. Both these schemes were discontinued in April 1986.

Shildon Bridge Rail Works (Ex-Employees)

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Paymaster General what information is available to his Department's local office as to how many employees laid off by Shildon Bridge rail works have since found work.

Mr. Lee: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Health and Safety Inspectors (Scotland)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Paymaster General what percentage of workplaces in each administrative region of Scotland have been visited in the past four years by health and safety inspectors.

Mr. Trippier: Details of the percentage of workplaces visited in each administrative region of Scotland are not available. The number of visits made in Scotland by inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive are:

Number of visits

[1] These figures exclude visits to transient sites eg construction sites and visits to investigate accidents and incidents. The number of investigations were recorded, but visits were not (ie an investigation involving several visits was counted only once.)
[2] 15 month period to bring in recording by financial year.

Mr. Michael Lush

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Paymaster General when he expects the Health and Safety Executive to publish its findings on the circumstances surrounding the death of Mr. Michael Lush.

Mr. Trippier: As a result of its investigation into the incident in which Mr. Michael Lush was killed, the Health and Safety Executive has decided to prosecute the BBC under section 3 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. A formal report of the investigation will not be published.

AIDS

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Paymaster General whether he has any plans to arrange for staff of his Department to be screened for antibodies to human immunodeficiency virus;

(2) whether any current or former staff of his Department have been found to have developed AIDS or antibodies to human immunodeficiency virus;

(3) what steps he has taken to ensure that staff of his Department are warned about those homosexual and other activities which are deemed to involve a high risk of AIDS infection.

Mr. Trippier: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Paymaster General what are the month-by-month unemployment figures for the borough of Knowsley since January 1984.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. The table gives the number of unemployed claimants in the Knowsley local authority district between January 1984 and February 1987. These figures are affected by the change in the timing of the compilation of unemployment statistics in March 1986.

Manpower Services Commission

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Paymaster General if he will publish the names of the members of each of the area manpower boards of the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Lee: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

YTS Trainees

Mr. Lawler asked the Paymaster General how many YTS trainees are currently working in the Department of Employment and Manpower Services Commission; and what are their employment status, terms and conditions, including remunerations.

Mr. Trippier: None at present, but the Department of Employment and the Manpower Services Commission propose to introduce a YTS scheme this Easter in four different parts of the country. Initially there will be places for 120 clerical trainees. About 20 will have employee statutes and the same terms and conditions and remunerations as Civil Servie clerical grades. About 100 will be non-employees who will receive the appropriate standard YTS allowances. The scheme will be an equal opportunity training programme, and all trainees will receive the same protection as employees under the Health and Safety at Work Act.

School Facilities

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General (1) whether his Department has investigated the possibility of using spare capacity in existing school buildings for the purpose of adult education and training;

(2) if he will request the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission to undertake a feasibility study of the joint use of school premises for the education of both children and adults; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My Department, via the Manpower Services Commission, contracts with various bodies to run adult training courses at the most cost effective rates. It is up to the training providers concerned, which will include local education authorities, to satisfy the Manpower Services Commission that the general training arrangements including the provision of accommodation, are adequate. It is for each local education authority to decide how best to use the facilities available to it.

Small Firms

Mr. Couchman asked the Paymaster General what plans he has to encourage closer links between the small firms service, local enterprise agencies and other support organisations.

Mr. Trippier: The Government encourage the small firms service, local enterprise agencies and other organisations to work together to form local networks which can provide a supportive environment in which small businesses can flourish. The small firms service has in fact long co-operated actively with LEAs and others in its role of assisting small companies.

To demonstrate the positive advantages of even closer co-operation a new initiative is being undertaken in the Yorkshire and Humberside region from April this year. This will involve LEAs being offered extra counselling support for their clients from the small firms service. Prior to the start of the initiative, the small firms service's regional counselling team will be considerably reinforced and a firm of consultants will be engaged to provide independent monitoring of the initiative. The extra support provided to local enterprise agencies participating in the initiative will be in addition to any assistance they may receive under the Government's local enterprise agency grant scheme.

Job Training Scheme

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if any recruits to the job training scheme are to be over 25 years of age; and what arrangements will be made to pay a training allowance to those recruits who are not entitled to unemployment benefit or supplementary benefit.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Availability for Work Test

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will detail the cost of conducting the availability for work test experiment on the over-50s age group of unemployed; and if he will make a statement on the outcome of the tests and plans for extending them nationwide.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General (1) how many staff are employed in (a) unemployment benefit offices, (b) jobcentres, (c) Manpower Services Commission and (d) the remainder of his Department; and how many separate buildings are occupied for each;

(2) how many staff are employed in all aspects of paying unemployment benefit and dealing with tribunals and fraud; and how many separate premises they occupy.

Mr. Lee: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Self-Employed Persons

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will provide for each year, since 1979 and for each region, Scotland and Wales the revised numbers of self-employed; and if he will state, for each figure, the variation from his previously published estimates.

Mr. Lee: The available estimates of the numbers of self-employed in each region, Scotland and Wales between 1979 and 1984 may be found on page 40 of "Historical Supplement No. 1" published with the February issue of Employment Gazette.

These estimates have not been revised. Following the 1986 labour force survey the estimates for 1985 have been revised, and they are given in the following table, which shows the variation between the revised figures and those previously published, together with the latest estimates for 1986.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Fixed Assets (Domestic Investment)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing net domestic investment in fixed assets in manufacturing industry in 1986 to the latest available date together with the corresponding figures for each of the years 1970 to 1986 at actual and at 1986 prices.

Mr. Butcher: Figures of net domestic fixed capital formation in manufacturing industry in 1986 are not yet available. The following table provides for the years 1970 to 1985 at both current and 1980 prices.

Net domestic fixed capital formation in manufacturing industry (excluding assets leased to manufacturers from the financial industries)

Steel Production

Sir John Osborn asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the outcome of the recent European Economic Community Ministers meeting on steel production; and what will be its impact on the level of production of the British steel industry in general, and more specifically the special steel industry of Sheffield.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) on 23 March at column 23. I would expect additional steel closures in continental Europe, if achieved, to benefit the United Kingdom steel industry as a whole, including firms in Sheffield.

Companies Houses

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the practice of Companies house, Cardiff when replying to letters written to them in the Welsh language, with regard to the use of the Welsh language.

Mr. Howard: The practice of the companies registration office is to respond in the Welsh language to any letters sent to it in that language.

Austin Rover

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what instructions have been given since 1983 to the management of Austin Rover to reveal the production costs of its models to the Ford Motor Company; to what extent the information revealed included the production costs of the Metro; what was the classification status of this information; what promises Ford gave on the use of this information; and what monitoring was carried out by his Department to ensure that Ford kept these promises.

Mr. Channon: In December 1985 Ford and the Rover Group board agreed to open exploratory talks about a possible merger of Ford and Austin Rover, and to exchange information about the two businesses on a reciprocal basis under a commercial confidentiality agreement. My Department was kept informed in broad terms of progress in these talks but the terms of the confidentiality agreement, its implementation, and the information exchanged under it, were a matter for the commercial parties. These exploratory talks were brought to an end in February 1986.

AIDS

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) whether he has any plans to arrange for staff of his Department to be screened for antibodies to human immunodeficiency virus;

(2) whether any current or former staff of his Department have been found to have developed AIDS or antibodies to human immunodeficiency virus;

(3) what steps he has taken to ensure that staff of his Department are warned about those homosexual and other activities which are deemed to involve a high risk of AIDS infection.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Raw Material Imports

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he is having towards the development of European-wide trade policies to prevent imports of raw materials which could be processed domestically in the countries of origin.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government consider it to be in the general interest of consumers and producers alike that trade in raw materials should be conducted on a free and open basis, which allows comparative advantage to determine the development of domestic processing industries. We do, however, have regular discussions with our European Community partners on measures to encourage viable domestic processing of raw materials in developing countries, for example through the Community's generalised scheme of preferences.

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what steps he is taking to improve the marketing conditions under which manufactured and sustainably produced tropical wood products can compete in Europe; and if he has any plans to extend the STABEX scheme to products such as plywood and joinery, or other such measures; which can guarantee that their raw material comes from sustainable and ecologically managed forestry concessions and other such requirements to encourage the production of tropical timber products on a sustainable and renewable basis;

(2) what discussions he is having with partners in the European Economic Community towards the implementation of a code of conduct for importers of semi-processed and processed products including sawn wood, non-assembly joinery and panels, with a view to requiring importers to import only from those producing countries.

(3) what discussions he is having with partners in the European Economic Community concerning changing existing trading policies in order to encourage the production of tropical timber products on a sustainable and renewable basis; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will make a statement on his involvement in, and the resources contributed to, the International Tropical Timber Organisation.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom has ratified the international tropical timber agreement of which the International Tropical Timber Organisation is the executive arm. The Department was represented at the first meeting (following the appointment of an executive director of ITTO), of the International Tropical Timber Council and has made its due contributions to the organisation.

Some of the ITTA's objectives are:

(1) to encourage members to support and develop industrial tropical timber reforestation and forest management activities.

(2) to encourage the development of national policies aimed at sustainable utilisation and conservation of tropical forests

(3) to encourage increased and further processing of tropical timber in producing countries

(4) to improve marketing and distribution of tropical timber exports of producing members.

Other European Community member states, the United States and Japan are also signatories to ITTO, as are the majority of tropical timber producing countries.

Her Majesty's Government believe the ITTO offers the best forum to address the Government's concern over the depletion of tropical forest resources. They will work with other signatories to the ITTA, and particularly EC member states, to achieve the aims of the agreement.

The STABEX scheme comes under the Lomé convention and covers primary processed timber. There are no plans to extend this to tropical timber products such as plywood.

Securities and Investments Board (Draft Rules)

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he intends to refer the draft rules of the Securities and Investments Board to the European Commission for clearance against anti-competition condemnation, pursuant to articles 85 and 86 of the treaty of Rome.

Mr. Howard: There is no requirement under the competition rules of the treaty to refer these proposed rules to the Commission for clearance. Nonetheless, copies of the rules have been sent to the Commission for information.

Mr. James Towler

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why Mr. James Towler was not reappointed to the chair of the North East Transport Users Consultative Committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: It is my Department's policy to maintain a steady turnover of appointments in the nationalised industry consumer councils in order to widen the opportunities for interested individuals to make a contribution. Appointments are for a single fixed term, although people are often offered further terms. Mr. Towler has served for longer than most. He has served on the committees for nearly 14 years and is about to complete this third term as chairman. My noble Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has made clear to Mr. Towler the Government's gratitude for all he has done on behalf of rail users in the region.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will appoint Mr. James Towler as an independent member of the central Transport Users Consultative Committee.

Mr. Howard: No.

Transport Users Consultative Committees

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people have been reappointed to the chairs of transport users consultative committees; and how many chairs of such committees are currently vacant.

Mr. Howard: The current chairmen of six of the Committees have served for more than one term. The remaining two are on their first appointment. None of the current chairmen has served for more than three terms. None of the chairs are vacant.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answers of 2 March and 24 March, on what currently available information the Government base the scale of Britain's contribution to ozone depletion and the consequent effect of a freeze or reduction in the production and use of chlorofluorocarbons or other agents responsible for the phenomenon.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Depletion of the ozone layer is a global problem and cannot be attributed to individual countries. It is not possible to quantify the effect of a single country taking precautionary measures to limit omissions of potential ozone depleting substances.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 24 March, on what basis he judged the information requested about the market share of chlorofluorocarbons to be commercially confidential.

Mr. Giles Shaw: There are only two United Kingdom producers of chlorofluorocarbons. If the United Kingdom share of the European market was revealed either company would then be able to calculate the other's market share.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 24 March, if he will now make it his policy to ensure that British manufacturers pursue the development of alternatives to fully halogenated chlorofluorocarbons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 26 March 1987, at column 243. It is for industry to decide the extent to which it pursues the development of alternatives.

Manufacturing Industry (Fixed Capital Formation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year from 1957 gross and net domestic fixed capital formation by manufacturing industry at current and at 1980 prices.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Manufacturing Industry (Plant and Machinery Investment)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in which years since 1957 gross fixed investment in plant and machinery in manufacturing industry in real terms has exceeded the 1979 level; and if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing on the basis of 1979 = 100 the amount of real investment in plant and machinery in each year since 1957 by manufacturing industry.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the increase in the real rate of exchange against the principal currencies since the date on which the nominal rate for sterling fell to its lowest point against the deutschmark, together with his estimate of the increase in United Kingdom, German, American and Japanese export prices in dollar terms since the fourth quarter of 1976, having regard to changes in the nominal exchange rate and rates of inflation since the quarter for which the figures were last published in the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics".

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 27 March 1987, c. 297]: Information for calculating real exchange rates in terms of relative export prices is not yet available beyond the third quarter of 1986; the daily closing of sterling/deutschmark exchange rate continued to decline to the end of January 1987.

Changes in export prices, exchange rates and rates of inflation since the fourth quarter of 1976 are in the following table:

Changes in prices and exchange rates (since fourth quarter 1976)

	United Kingdom	Federal Republic of Germany	United States of America	Japan
	per cent.	per cent.	per cent.	per cent.
Export unit value indices[1] (dollar terms)	+94	+54	+79	+70
Nominal exchange rates[2] (currencies per dollar)	+15½	−16½	[3]	−45½
Consumer prices[2]	+136	+39	+90	+40

[1] To 1986 (third quarter).
[2] To 1986 (fourth quarter).

Hereford Bye Street Gate Sculptures

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out in the Official Report the evidence which has been submitted to the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art to sustain the claim that the Hereford Bye Street Gate sculptures have been exported and re-imported to the United Kingdom in the last 50 years.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 27 March 1987, c. 298]: No such evidence was submitted to the reviewing committee. A report of the committee's consideration in March 1986 is to be found on page 26 of the thirty second report of the reviewing committee (CM44) presented to Parliament by the Minister for the Arts in December 1986.

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to identify the intending purchasers of objects which are the subject of consideration by the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 27 March 1987, c. 298]: No.

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he was first advised of the sale of the Hereford Bye Street Gate sculptures; what has been the reason for the length of time which has elapsed since (a) for the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art to make a recommendation and (b) for him to reach a decision; and when he now expects to make his decision.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 27 March 1987, c. 298]: My Department was advised of the association of the statues with Bye Street Gate of the city of Hereford in February 1986, some time after their sale to their present owner, when it was recommended that the views of the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art should be sought. The reviewing committee considered the matter on 18 March 1986 and its recommendation to my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts, was announced in a press notice issued by the Office of Arts and Libraries on 21 March 1986. We have sought to ensure that those concerned have had proper opportunity to put forward their views for consideration before a decision is made. The Secretary of State will be making his decision as soon as possible.

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) whether the Hereford Bye Street Gate sculptures are still located in the United Kingdom;

(2) if any export licence has been granted in respect of the Hereford Bye Street Gate sculptures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 27 March 1987, c. 298]: The objects are subject to export control. No licence for their export from the United Kingdom has been granted.

ENERGY

Pressurised Water Nuclear Reactors

1. Mr. George Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has discussed with the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board plans for the construction of additional pressurised water nuclear reactors.

Mr. Peter Walker: The board has indicated that it wishes to submit further applications for PWR stations in due course, but I have as yet received no such applications.

Nuclear Power Projects

10. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has had concerning public expenditure on the promotion of nuclear power projects.

Mr. Alastair Goodlad: My right hon. Friend and I have received many representations about the importance of informing the public of the facts about the safety of nuclear power and its economic and strategic benefits.

Closed Collieries

17. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he is satisfied that the procedure for registration of interests in closed collieries allows adequate opportunity for applications by miners to take over the pits in which they have worked; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: This is a management matter for British Coal. I am asking the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

British Coal

18. Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Coal; and what was discussed.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend and I have regular meetings with the chairman of the British Coal Corporation to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

27. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet Sir Robert Haslam, chairman of British Coal, to discuss future energy needs in the light of the Layfield report.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have regular meetings with the chairman of British Coal to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

Combined Heat and Power Schemes

19. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will report on any new developments with combined heat and power with particular reference to the Leicester Energy Ltd. consortium.

Mr. David Hunt: Members of the Leicester CHP consortium have now agreed to support the formation of a heat utility company to take the Leicester project through to the next stage.

Coal Industry (Report)

20. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to respond in more detail to the Energy Committee's report on the coal industry; and if he will make a statement.

38. Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he proposes to reply in detail to the main recommendations of the Energy Committee's report on the coal industry.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Government are giving careful consideration to the Select Committee's report on the coal industry, and I hope that it will be possible to respond shortly.

Coal-fired Power Stations

21. Mr. Orme asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to discuss the ordering of coal-fired power stations.

30. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to discuss new coal-fired capacity.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the right hon. Gentleman and the hon. Gentleman to my earlier answer today to the hon. Members for Bassetlaw (Mr. Ashton) and Knowsley, South (Mr. Hughes).

Conservation Savings

22. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the maximum saving of electricity his Department estimates could be achieved from an investment of £1,500 million over five years in energy conservation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: It is not possible to estimate the impact such expenditure on energy efficiency would have on electricity saving. Cost-effective energy efficiency measures promoted by the Government have an across-the-board impact on all fuels.

Home Insulation

23. Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the additional resources which would be required to ensure that the backlog of inadequately insulated homes occupied by households on low incomes would be properly insulated over the next five years.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 1 December 1986 at column 455-56.

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many houses have been insulated since 1979 with assistance under Government schemes.

Mr. David Hunt: Since 1979 approximately 3 million households in Great Britain have received grants for loft insulation under the homes insulation scheme, and since my Department began its programme of support for community insulation projects in 1981, this movement has insulated 300,000 homes of low income households.

Tidal Power

24. Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any plans further to increase funding for research and development of tidal power.

Mr. David Hunt: Tidal energy is one of the United Kingdom's most promising renewable energy resources and my right hon. Friend has announced an enlarged £5·5 million programme of research and development on tidal power which is aimed at reducing uncertainty on costs, performance, and regional and environmental issues.

Sizewell B

25. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the public reaction to his announcement of 13 March approving the Sizewell B project.

Mr. Peter Walker: It is clear that the detailed and thorough work undertaken by Sir Frank Layfield has been widely recognised.

Refuse-Generated Methane

26. Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Energy what financial support is being provided by his Department for the development of refuse-generated methane as an energy source.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department has committed nearly £2 million towards the cost of a number of projects for the development and exploitation of land-fill gas as an energy source, the total cost of which is just over £5·5 million. Of this support, some £700,000 is for research and development work and nearly £1·25 million is for demonstration projects under the energy efficiency demonstration scheme.

Wind Power Generation

28. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he is considering any amendments to the Energy Act 1983 to encourage the private generation of electricity by wind power.

Mr. Goodlad: No. The Energy Act 1983 has already put in place a framework designed to facilitate the development of economic private generation, whether from renewable or other sources.

35. Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received seeking increased finance for research and development of wind power.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received from the British Wind Energy Association a copy of its position paper "Wind Power for the UK" which, inter alia, calls for increased expenditure on research and development in wind energy. My Department regards wind power as one of the most promising alternative energies and has spent some £20 million since 1979 on R&D into the harnessing of wind power. Our current annual spend is around £4 million. I have invited the BWEA to discuss its paper with my officials.

Nuclear Power (Promotion)

29. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received concerning the expenditure of public funds on the promotion of nuclear power.

39. Mr Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received concerning the expenditure by Her Majesty's Government on the promoting of nuclear power.

Mr. Goodlad: I have received many representations about the importance of informing the public of the facts about the safety of nuclear power and its economic and strategic benefits.

Coal Industry Dispute

31. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has about latest progress with the inquiry by British Coal into outstanding cases of sacked miners arising from the recent strike.

37. Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has been informed by the chairman of British Coal of the result of his review of the cases of dismissed miners.

Mr. David Hunt: I understand that an announcement will shortly be made regarding the corporation's review of all outstanding cases of dismissed miners.

Coal-firing Scheme

32. Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received regarding the future of the coal-firing scheme.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department has received five formal representations in respect of the future of the coal-firing scheme.

Nuclear Power Stations

33. Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received from business and industry about orders for nuclear power stations.

Mr. Goodlad: I have received a number of representations from the power station construction industry about the need for home orders. The Sizewell PWR will provide welcome business for the industry.

Nuclear Power Capacity

34. Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the impact of his decision to expand nuclear power capacity on the balance of fuel consumption in the United Kingdom for the next 10 to 20 years.

Mr. Goodlad: Sir Frank Layfield noted the importance of diversity of fuel supply in his report on the Sizewell B inquiry. During the 1990s much of the United Kingdom's magnox capacity is likely to reach the end of its useful life. The construction of Sizewell B will help to offset this prospective loss in nuclear-generating capacity.

Renewable Energy Sources

36. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to propose fresh United Kingdom or European Community research into renewable sources of energy.

Mr. David Hunt: A substantial number of new projects are continually being established as part of my Department's research, development and demonstration programmes into renewable sources of energy. Over 200 projects are currently active with over 80 new projects started each year. Many of these are supported by the European Community as part of its R, D and D programmes. The United Kingdom plays a full and active part in formulating Community programmes and will continue to propose new projects for support where this is appropriate.

Nuclear Generation (Manpower)

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) pursuant to his answer of 24 November 1986, Official Report, column 16, if he will specify the types of jobs assumed in his calculation of the number of jobs indirectly dependent on the nuclear industry; and if he will estimate the number of jobs in each category;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 24 November, Official Report, column 16, if he will specify the assumptions made in his estimate for the number of jobs indirectly dependent on the generation of nuclear power.

Mr. Goodlad: The total number of jobs dependent on the nuclear industry is estimated at around 150,000. The number of jobs indirectly dependent on the nuclear industry is estimated at over 100,000. This is made up of jobs in many sectors, including the construction, heavy plant manufacture, component supply and service sectors. There are also many jobs in other sectors which are not connected directly with the industry but depend on those that are.

Electricity Costs

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he last discussed the likely cost of electricity from a newly constructed coal-fired power station with the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend meets the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board from time to time to discuss a variety of matters.

AIDS

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) whether he has any plans to arrange for staff of his Department to be screened for antibodies to human immunodeficiency virus;

(2) whether any current or former staff of his Department have been found to have developed AIDS or antibodies to human immunodeficiency virus;

(3) what steps he has taken to ensure that staff of his Department are warned about those homosexual and other activities which are deemed to involve a high risk of AIDS infection.

Mr. Peter Walker: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Closed Power Stations

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to how many closed power stations sites remain in the ownership of the Central Electricity Generating Board; and how many cleared power stations it retains.

Mr. Goodlad: I am advised by the Central Electricity Generating Board that it has 31 closed power stations, of which four are being retained by the board against possible future requirements and the remaining 27 are in the course of disposal. Of the latter, 13 have been cleared or are in an advanced stage of demolition.

Monergy Campaign

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the savings so far achieved by the Monergy campaign in terms of estimated energy use forgone.

Mr. David Hunt: The Monergy campaign has been highly successful in pursuing its aim of promoting the cost-effective improvements in the efficiency with which energy is used. Amongst the substantial energy savings which have been made and will continue to be made in the future, savings of over £250 million a year have been identified since the start of the Government's schemes through energy survey grants and over £100 million a year is currently being saved as a direct result of the energy efficiency demonstration scheme. There has been a substantial increase in monitoring and targeting systems and they are now in place in 200 energy-consuming sites. During Energy Efficiency Year 1986, there was an increase of 70 per cent. over the previous year in homes insulated under the community programme. More than 100,000 homes were so insulated during the year.

North Sea Oil

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will assess the impact of the Budget proposals upon North sea oil and oil-related construction activity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The Budget measures should enable the industry to bring forward new developments and to provide additional orders for the oil-related construction sector.

Public Companies and Undertakings (Statistics)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will list all the partially or wholly owned subsidiaries of British Nuclear Fules plc, the Central Electricity Generating Board, the Electricity Council, FASTEC, the National Nuclear Corporation, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, URENCO Ltd (UK), the South of Scotland Electricity Board and the North of Scotland Hydro-Electricity Board; whether he will list those consortia in which the above companies have shares together with the percentage of that shareholding; whether he will list those companies in which the subsidiaries and consortia of the above companies hold shares; whether he will state the scope of his responsibility for the commercial activities of the above companies in respect of shares which they may wish to acquire in other businesses; and whether any other Government Departments are involved.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 13 March 1987, c. 314-316]: My earlier reply included details of the holdings of the CEGB and the SSEB in the Electricity Producers' Insurance Co. Ltd. I am advised that there is an additional similar company—NIRA Ltd—in which those bodies have interests of 31·5 per cent. and 5 per cent. respectively. I apologise for any inconvenience caused by its omission.

TRANSPORT

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make the gathering of information on ethnic origins compulsory, and publish the percentage of entrants to his Department who failed to respond to the ethnic origins questionnaire.

Mr. Moore: I have no plans to do so. In the period 1 October 1985 to 1 March 1987, 28 per cent. of new entrants to my Department did not complete an ethnic monitoring questionnaire or gave an invalid response.

Greater London

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements exist within his Department, within the central headquarters or in any regional or sub-regional organisation, for dealing with his responsibilities regarding public services or any other function in respect of the Greater London area; and how many full-time equivalent staff are involved in such work.

Mr. Moore: Many aspects of my responsibilities affect Greter London to some degree. In particular, my Department's Greater London regional office has responsibilities for construction and maintenance of trunk roads, transport supplementary grant for local roads, the Woolwich ferry, the traffic signal system, and traffic management on the designated road network. Staff in post number 170.

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Transport with which Departments and non-departmental bodies his Department and its related non-departmental public bodies has consulted during 1986-87 in respect of services provided within Greater London; approximately how often such consultations have taken place; and what issues were discussed.

Mr. Moore: My Department consults as appropriate other Departments and non-departmental public bodies on matters relating to services in London. No central record is kept of these numerous oral and written consultations.

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether there are any proposals to change the arrangements for discharging his Department's responsibilities regarding public services or any other function in respect of the Greater London area during the forthcoming year.

Mr. Moore: I have no proposals to change the current arrangements in respect of the responsibilities of my Department's Greater London regional office.

Woolwich Free Ferry

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recommendations he has received concerning the operation of the Woolwich free ferry; and what consultations he intends to initiate with the London boroughs of Greenwich and Newham and bodies representing users of the ferry.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The consultants have completed their interim report. They and we have been waiting for the views of the London borough of Greenwich, which is our agent for the operation of the ferry. The consultants will then make final recommendations.

Coaches (Intimidatory Driving)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport what further steps he intends to take to outlaw intimidatory driving by coaches.

Mr. David Mitchell: Additional legislation is not the answer to that small minority of coach drivers who act as my hon. Friend suggests. If he has examples, he should pass them on to the police or to there appropriate chairman of traffic commissioners, who have adequate powers to deal with intimidatory driving. The Department will shortly be consulting on proposed regulations requiring the fitting of speed governors to coaches.

National Bus Company (Subsidiaries)

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that National Bus Company sales programme will not lead to land redevelopment for non-transport purposes.

Mr. David Mitchell: In accordance with its statutory duties, the National Bus Company seeks to sell its local bus operating subsidiaries to parties who will continue to operate bus services. My right hon. Friend sees no reason to seek to prevent redevelopment of land owned by privatised bus companies, as more efficient use of assets in this way will often be a part of the companies' plans for the successful continuation of their bus operations. Where a property has a potentially high alternative use value, the National Bus Company is imposing a mortgage charge to secure for the taxpayer a substantial share of future development gain.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Transport what former National Bus Company subsidiaries have been privatised; what form of privatisation took place and on what terms in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The following National Bus Company subsidiaries have so far been bought out by their own managements:

Badgerline Ltd.
Cambus Ltd.
Cheltenham and Gloucester Omnibus Company Ltd.
The City of Oxford Motor Services Ltd.

Devon General Ltd.
Eastern Counties Omnibus Ltd.
East Kent Road Car Company Ltd.
The Eastern National Omnibus Company Ltd.
East Yorkshire Motor Services Ltd.
The Maidstone and District Motor Services Ltd.
Midland Red Coaches Ltd.
Midland Red West Ltd.
Potteries Motor Traction Company Ltd.

Pleasurama Group ATL (Holdings) Ltd.	National Holiday Ltd. NTE Coaches Ltd.

The terms of individual sales are commercially confidential.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when the West Riding Group, West Riding Auto and Yorkshire Woollens, former subsidiaries of the National Bus Company, were privatised; to whom the West Riding Group was sold; what was the valuation of its assets at the time of sale; and what was the valuation of assets given in the last accounts published for the West Riding Group as a National Bus Company subsidiary;

(2) when the National Travel East Coaching Unit, Sheffield, a former subsidiary of the National Bus Company, was privatised; to whom the unit was sold; what was the valuation of its assets at the time of sale; and what was the valuation of assets given in the last accounts published for the unit as a National Bus Company subsidiary;

(3) when Yorkshire Traction, a former National Bus Company subsidiary, was privatised; to whom Yorkshire Traction was sold; what was the valuation of assets at the time Yorkshire Traction was sold; and what was the valuation of assets given in the last accounts published for Yorkshire Traction as a National Bus Company subsidiary.

Mr. David Mitchell: The information is as follows:

Company	Purchaser	Total net assets at 31 December 1985[2] £000
West Riding Automobile Company Ltd. (including Yorkshire Woollens)	Management team	[1]£10,947
NTE Coaches Ltd.	ATL (Holdings) Ltd.
The Yorkshire Traction Company Ltd.	Management team	£2,992

[1] These businesses operated as one NBC company but were sold as separate subsidiaries.
[2] Excluding amounts due from National Bus Company.

Asset valuations at the time of sale are, like other details of the disposals, commercially confidential.

British Transport Advertising

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the sale of the British Transport Advertising division by British Rail.

Mr. David Mitchell: Since January, we have received several representations from, or on behalf of, companies excluded from the railways board's invitation to submit bids for British Transport Advertising. The board has now invited those companies, and several others, to submit bids.

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines he has given to the British Railways Board in ensuring that the sale of the British Transport Advertising division will enhance competition in the outdoor advertising market.

Mr. David Mitchell: None.

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines he has given to the British Railways Board in ensuring that the sale of British Transport Advertising division will not have an immediate effect on jobs within the division.

Mr. David Mitchell: None. The British Railways Board is seeking bids for British Transport Advertising as a going concern.

A1-M1 Link

Mr. Fry asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what estimate has been made of the number of vehicles that will divert to the A1-M1 link daily once it is completed;

(2) what is his Department's current estimate of the number of heavy goods vehicles which will use the A1-M1 link daily when it is completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Traffic flows on the M1-A1 link road are predicted to be in the following ranges:

	Vehicles per day (thousands) All vehicles	Heavy goods vehicles
M1-M6 to Rothwell	12-17	3-4
Rothwell to Kettering	27-32	4-5
Kettering Southern Bypass	20-25	3-5
Kettering to Thrapston	12-17	2-4
Thrapston to A1	12-18	3-4
A1 to A14 (A604)	19-25	4-5

Mr. Fry asked the Secretary of State for Transport on what date his Department originally announced the alternative routes for the A1-M1 link in Northamptonshire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Public comment was invited on four alternative route corridors in October 1974. The preferred route was announced in August 1975.

Instrument Flight Rules

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport under what circumstances, at night, the pilot of an aircraft engaged on an instrument flight rules flight is permitted to accept, from the air traffic control unit at his destination, responsibility for his own separation from other aircraft as a result of cancelling his instrument flight rules plan during his approach to land.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The rules under which aircraft flying within the United Kingdom airspace may fly are laid down in the Rules of the Air and Air Traffic Control Regulations 1985.

Rule 17(1)(a) states that:

"Notwithstanding that the flight is being made with air traffic control clearance it shall remain the duty of the commander of an aircraft to take all possible measures to ensure that his aircraft does not collide with any other aircraft".

AIDS

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether he has any plans to arrange for staff of his Department to be screened for antibodies to human immunodeficiency virus;

(2) whether any current or former staff of his Department have been found to have developed AIDS or antibodies to human immunodeficiency virus;

(3) what steps he has taken to ensure that staff of his Department are warned about those homosexual and other activities which are deemed to involve a high risk of AIDS infection.

Mr. Moore: I will answer these questions shortly.

Freightliner

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 38, if he will list the volume of freight, revenue and staff employed by Freightliner, for each of the five years prior to 1981; and if he will list the operating costs of Freightliner for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Moore: The information, which is published in Freightliner's annual report and accounts, is as follows:

	Volume of freight carried (TEUs)[1] 000s	Revenue £ million	Staff employed at year's end
1976	874	39·2	2,349
1977	870	46·1	2,418
1978	843	50·9	2,423
1979	871	60·3	2,522
1980	866	68·9	2,432

[1] Containers forwarded by land in 20 foot equivalent units (TEUs).

	Operating costs £ million
1976	37·9
1977	44·7
1978	49·3
1979	58·3
1980	67·6
1981	71·1
1982	74·0
1983	96·1
1984-85	100·1
1985-86	106·9

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the sites of and numbers of Freightliner terminals, open in May 1979 and currently.

Mr. Moore: There were 39 Freightliner terminals open in May 1979, listed as follows:

Aberdeen, Dundee, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Coatbridge, Linwood, Greenock, Newcastle, Stockton, Leeds, Hull, Longsight, Trafford Park, Barton Dock Road, Garston, Aintree, Holyhead, Nottingham, Dudley, Birmingham, Coventry, Swansea, Cardiff, Stewartby, Ipswich, Felixstowe, Harwich, Tilbury, Barking, Stratford, Willesden, Kings Cross, Bristol, Southampton Maritime, Milbrook, Poole, Plymouth, Belfast, Dublin.

There are 33 Freightliner terminals open at present, listed as follows:

Aberdeen*, Dundee*, Edinburgh*, Glasgow, Coatbridge, Newcastle*, Stockton, Leeds, Hull*, Longsight*, Trafford Park, Barton Dock Road, Garston, Seaforth, Holyhead, Nottingham*, Birmingham, Swansea*, Cardiff, Ipswich, Felixstowe, Tilbury, Barking, Stratford, Dagenham Storage, Willesden, Bristol, Swindon, Southampton Maritime, Milbrook, Belfast, Dublin, Zeebrugge.

*The terminals marked with an asterisk are to close on 6 April.

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report all the official guidance provided by his Department to British Rail on the operation of Freightliner since 1979.

Mr. Moore: Guidance on the operation of the Freightliner business is included in the letter of 21 October 1986 to the chairman of the BRB setting objectives. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Section 8 Grants

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of section 8 grant applications refused by his Department in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Moore: In the last 10 years, only two formal applications for section 8 grants have been refused: in 1985 and in 1986.

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide a list of all existing private sidings, which have been, or are, fully or partly, funded by his Department using section 8 grants, categorising such sidings according to geographical region.

Mr. Moore: The information is as follows. At a number of the locations, more than one grant has been awarded.

In a few cases, grant may have been for handling equipment only, but this could be verified at disproportionate cost. The projects marked [1] are where grant was for wagons only.

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report, for each of the last 10 years, the number of section 8 grants made by his Department, showing in each case, the total value of annual grants, the average value of individual grants in each year, and the highest and lowest individual grant in each of those years.

Mr. Moore: The information requested is as follows:

	Number of grants	Total value	Average value	Highest value	Lowest value
1977	12	2,695,000	224,583	535,000	11,000
1978	10	3,734,000	374,000	897,000	17,000
1979	11	3,670,000	367,000	993,000	40,000
1980	11	5,576,000	506,000	1,875,000	65,000
1981	5	3,951,000	790,200	1,620,000	79,000
1982	11	3,214,000	292,181	660,000	39,000
1983	7	4,237,500	605,357	2,521,000	32.000
1984	13	5,157,540	396,734	1,530,000	8,500
1985	17	8,612,068	506,592	3,707,026	8,875
1986	2	1,976,150	988,075	1,7500,000	226,150
1987 to date	—	—	—	—	—
Totals	99	42,832,258	432,649	3,707,026	8,500

The figures exclude grant awards made but not taken up and request only the initial grant award in all cases. Final outturn will be higher when design changes and inflation are taken into account, in nearly all cases.

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the numbers of staff working (a) solely and (b) partly, on the provision and processing of section 8 grants, in 1979, 1983 and currently.

Mr. Moore: The information requested is as follows:

	Solely	Partly
1979	3	6
1983	2	7
1987	2	5

Road Accidents

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide a detailed list of all research and development projects into ways of reducing road accidents and casualties under way or planned for 1987-88 at the transport and road research laboratory or contracted out to other agencies relating to (a) road user behaviour, (b) road environment and (c) vehicle safety.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. In view of the volume of information requested, I am writing to the hon. Member and placing copies of the letter in the Library.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if as a means of reducing the under-reporting of road accidents and of improving knowledge of the epidemiology of road accidents, he has any plans to extend linkage of hospital in-patient statistics and STATS 19 data to the rest of Britain.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The transport and road research laboratory is continuing to explore linkage to hospital in-patient data with STATS 19 data with the intention of extending the arrangements already in place in Scotland to Wales and the English regions if this proves to be practicable. There are difficulties in gaining access to the hospital data and in the quality of that data to enable the linkage to be achieved. Problem of gaining access is a medical ethical one.

The quality of data is inferior, in that not all areas use the up-to-date version of the classification of disease (ICD code) on which the linkage depends to identify the type of road user. The computer method of linkage developed for Scottish data is given in LR 1130 and examples of use of the linked data in RR 96.

Car Telephones

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to monitor the use of hand-held car phones, following the advice given in the new edition of the highway code;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to make the use of hand-held car phones whilst driving a specific motoring offence.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Advice on the use of car telephones is in the new edition of the highway code. I have no plans to introduce additional legislation. I prefer to rely on the good sense and responsibility of the vast majority of drivers to put safety first when given clear and sensible advice on how to do so.

It would not be practical to monitor the use of car telephones. We will keep under review any evidence of their implications for road safety.

Steering Wheels

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made in the European Community towards a performance specification for car steering wheels to minimise the risk of facial injury, following published research and development work carried out at the transport and road research laboratory.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A draft standard based on TRRL research is under discussion in the expert group advising the European Commission. We hope that a final standard will be agreed by the end of this year and that the Commission will then propose an appropriate amending directive.

Passenger Accidents

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide information on the relative risk of accident injury for passenger travel in aircraft, rail and long distance coach and minibus services either by miles travelled, trips or on a population basis.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The following data are readily available:

Casualty rate per billion passenger kilometres: 1982

	Number
Rail
Movement accidents[1]	60
Train accidents	7
Bus/Coach
Motorways	10
Non built-up "A" roads	55
All roads[1]	193
Airline	0·03

[1] Includes boarding and alighting accidents, which are not included in train accidents or motorway accidents and which occur comparatively rarely on non-built-up roads.

The rate for airline passengers is for United Kingdom-registered aircraft operating passenger services. It varies considerably from year to year, the highest figure in recent years being 1·3 in 1985. For minibuses, data on passenger kilometres are not available and accident reports do not distinguish minibuses from motor caravans.

Further information is in "Road Accidents Great Britain 1982" (pages 15 and 16). A copy is in the Library.

Train Timekeeping

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any statistics about the effects on passenger train timekeeping of the reduction of railway lines to single track.

Mr. David Mitchell: No.

Fishing Vessels

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to introduce legislation on, and a nationality test for, the beneficial ownership of fishing vessels registered in the United Kingdom and dependencies as recommended by the working group which reported to him last autumn.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government are considering this matter.

Severe Weather

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to prevent a repetition of the disruption caused by severe winter weather earlier in the current year in the south west; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: During January, heavy snowfall occured in the south-west, particularly in the far south-western tip of Cornwall. The motorway and trunk road network was kept open, with the exception of two stretches of the A30 and A46, each of which was blocked by drifts for about 24 hours.

The Department already has comprehensive arrangements with highway authorities for keeping open national roads during severe weather, and it provides special snowploughs/gritters for use on motorways. These arrangements cannot guarantee that no disruption will occur. They do ensure that any such disruption is limited. The Department is more generally reviewing its arrangements with local authorities to see if any improvements are called for in the light of this winter's experience.

Railways in the south-west are the responsibility of the British Railways Board. I understand that the board has identified a number of measures to deal generally with exceptionally severe weather in the light of its experience during January.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for Transport what change in the cost of London Regional Transport services has occurred since the Government assumed responsibility from the Greater London council.

Mr. David Mitchell: The chairman of LRT in 1984 was given the objective of reducing the level of revenue support from ratepayers and taxpayers to £95 million in 1987-88. The last plans to be made by the GLC for London Transport had revenue subsidy rising to £245 million in 1987-88. In fact, the corporation succeeded in reducing revenue support to £97 million in 1985-86, thus almost achieving the objective two years early. The continuing reduction in revenue support this year and next will allow the burden of London's ratepayers to be reduced by £55 million in two years, and at the same time an increase in investment to a record £280 million.

Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current level of demand for London Regional Transport underground services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: London Regional Transport estimates that 3,880 million passenger miles will be travelled on the underground during 1986-87. The corresponding figure for the last full year during which the GLC controlled London Transport was 2,700 million passenger miles. This year's figure is another all-time record and I congratulate the corporation on its continued success in attracting passengers to use its services.

Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for Transport what transport services are currently being provided by London Regional Transport for disabled people.

Mr. David Mitchell: In addition to its growing network of wheelchair-accessible mobility buses, LRT has recently announced its decision to adapt the fleet of Airbus vehicles to enable them to carry wheelchair-bound passengers between central London and Heathrow airport. An accessible minibus service to and from the airport is being provided meanwhile, together with a service linking the main line stations. LRT has increased by 20 per cent. the funding available for borough-based dial-a-ride schemes in London, which have a steadily rising membership. It continues to administer the London taxicard scheme on behalf of participating boroughs. LRT is also undertaking a major programme to improve access for elderly and ambulant disabled people to their conventional buses. All these developments show clearly the increasing regard being given to the transport needs of disabled people in London.

Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for Transport what changes have been made to concessionary travel arrangements for the elderly and disabled in Greater London since the Government assumed responsibility for London Regional Transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: All 33 London local authorities have agreed to participate in a voluntary scheme in 1986-87 and 1987-88 which offers free travel for the elderly and disabled on all LRT services except before 9 am on weekdays, as under the former GLC scheme. The London Regional Transport Act 1984 guarantees the continued availability of a free travel scheme in London in the absence of voluntary agreement between the local authorities. This is in stark contrast to the scaremongering which took place when the Government assumed responsibility for London Regional Transport, and before the abolition of the GLC.

Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for Transport what increase in London Regional Transport fares there has been since the Government assumed responsibility from the Greater London council.

Mr. David Mitchell: LRT fares have been held broadly in line with inflation and below the general movement in wages. The latest fares revision on 11 January 1987 increased fares in real terms by an average of ½ per cent., maintaining real fares broadly at their level following the last fares change by London Transport under GLC control.

Mr. Forman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current level of demand for London Regional Transport bus services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: London Regional Transport estimates that 2,700 million passenger miles will be travelled on its bus services during 1986-87. The corresponding figure for the last full year during which the GLC controlled London Transport was 2,440 million passenger miles. This year's figure is the highest since 1978, a particularly praiseworthy achievement when seen against the long-term general decline in demand for bus services in Britain.

DEFENCE

NATO

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the posts, ranks, and responsibilities of the two representatives from his Department who sit on the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's planning board for European inland surface transport.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 20 February 1986 at column 329.

Radioactive Materials (Transport)

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the Oldham alert system for incidents involving the transportation of radioactive weapons materials provides for the county fire officer, the chief emergency planning officer, and county and district chief executives to be notified of a convoy accident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: In addition to any action taken by the civil police, who are alerted immediately after an accident involving radioactive material, in accordance with their local incident plans, our contingency plans also cater for the rapid provision of expert advice as required to representatives of local agencies, including those referred to by the hon. Member.

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for Defence what guidance is given to Royal Marines escorting radioactive weapons materials convoys in south Yorkshire.

Mr. Stanley: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to comment on the methods used or the procedures applied to the movement of nuclear weapons.

Marconi

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has had any consultations with the Marconi group of companies about the Cosmos computer project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have had no such consultations. Cosmos is a private venture development by Marconi and is therefore that company's concern.

Armed Forces (Brutality)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many letters his Department has received since 1979 concerning allegations of maltreatment or brutality in the armed services.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only with disproportionate cost and effort.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men have asked to leave the armed services during the last eight years because of maltreatment or brutality.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally. If a service man indicated that his desire to leave the armed forces was due to maltreatment or brutality the allegations would be fully investigated under the arrangements set out in my reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 23 March at column 2.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many courts martial have been held since 1979 concerning allegations of maltreatment or brutality in the armed forces.

(2) on how many occasions since 1979 his Department has held an internal inquiry concerning maltreatment and brutality in the armed forces.

Mr. Freeman: I shall reply shortly.

British Military Hospital, Dharan

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what were the full costs of running the British military hospital in Dharan, Nepal, in 1984 and 1985;

(2) if he will make a statement on the future of the British military hospital in Dharan, Nepal.

Mr. Freeman: I shall answer shortly.

AIDS

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether he has any plans to arrange for staff of his Department to be screened for antibodies to human immunodeficiency virus;

(2) whether any current or former staff of his Department have been found to have developed AIDS or antibodies to HIV;

(3) what steps he has taken to ensure that staff of his Department are warned about those homosexual and other activities which are deemed to involves a high risk of AIDS infection.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I shall answer shortly.

Low-flying Aircraft

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report the number of flights of low-flying aircraft over the Borders in each of the years since 1983; and how many complaints his Department has received in each of those years.

Mr. Freeman: Low-flying administrative areas do not correspond with regional boundaries. Figures for the Borders region are not, therefore, available.

SCOTLAND

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make the gathering of information on ethnic origins compulsory, and publish the percentage of entrants to his Department who failed to respond to the ethnic origins questionnaire.

Mr. Rifkind: Surveys of the ethnic origins of staff have been carried out in agreement with the Council of Civil Service Unions on the basis of voluntary self-classification. There are no plans at present to change to a compulsory system; however, the Civil Service and the Council of Civil Service Unions are keen to improve the data base and are discussing practical ways in which this can be done. Information on the response rates in the existing new entrant surveys is not readily available.

Asbestos

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what additional finance he is granting to (a) industry, (b) local authorities and (c) health boards to remove asbestos from their premises.

Mr. Ancram: While my right hon. and learned Friend pays particular regard to any special needs brought to his attention in determining the resources to be made available to local authorites and health boards, and while asbestos removal or treatment may in suitable cases form part of an assisted industrial development scheme, no funds are specifically allocated for work relating to asbestos.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's estimate of the time it will take to remove the optimum amount of asbestos from premises in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: The Department is not in a position to make such an estimate. Authorities and individual businesses are themselves best placed to examine their own building stocks, to identify any problems and to assess the nature and time scale of any necessary asbestos treatment. Guidance issued by the Department emphasises that removal programmes are often neither the best nor the safest course of action to follow.

Cancer

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the number of deaths in Scotland from each form of cancer, broken down for men and women, for each of the last 10 years up to the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. John MacKay: The information required is published in table C2.1 of the Registrar General for Scotland's annual reports. A copy for each year can be found in the Library.

AIDS

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether he has any plans to arrange for staff of his Department to be screened for antibodies to human immunodeficiency virus;

(2) whether any current or former staff of his Department have been found to have developed AIDS or antibodies to human immunodeficiency virus;

(3) what steps he has taken to ensure staff of his Department are warned about those homosexual and other activities which are deemed to involve a high risk of AIDS infection.

Mr. Rifkind: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Unleaded Petrol

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what action his Department has taken to promote the use of unleaded petrol in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: As stated by my hon. Friend the Minister for Environment, Countryside and Planning in his answer of 23 June 1986 to my hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Mr. Carlisle) at column 3, the Government's immediate aim is the establishment of a network of filling stations supplying unleaded petrol. This should be primarily a matter for the industry but the Government do not rule out the need for other measures should they prove necessary.

Forestry Commission (Land Sales)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if the Forestry Commission has plans to offer for sale any further areas of land in Sutherland and Caithness;

(2) if he will make it his policy to ensure that the Forestry Commission gives conservation organisations first refusal when offering for sale parcels of land in areas of high conservation interest; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Community Programme Places (Fife)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, further to his answer of 26 March, if he will provide for 1987-88 for Fife his revised figure for community programme places and state the variation between this figure and his original allocation.

Mr. Lang: Further to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 26 March, the original allocation of community programme places to Fife for 1987-88 totalled 1,710.

Subsequently, the provisional number of places available to Fife was increased by 40 to 1,750.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many persons are waiting in Scotland for (a) hip joint operations, (b) knee joint operations and (c) kidney treatment;

(2) how many persons on the hospital waiting list in Scotland have been waiting for (a) more than six months and (b) more than a year; and if he will give figures for each year since and including 1979.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not available centrally.

Scottish Development Agency (Public Relations)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland why the SDA put out to private PR consultants the arranging of the ceremony of the declaration of continuing commitment to the east end of Glasgow, and what was the total cost of the event.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to his reply, 23 March 1987, c. 28]: I understand that the agency took this managerial decision because, at the time the requirements for the event were being identified, the agency's public relations department was understaffed owing to unfilled vacancies. The cost to the agency of the event is likely to be in the region of £13,000. I am unable to comment on any costs incurred by other participating bodies.

NORTHERN IRELAND

TBTO Leak (Lough Neagh)

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement regarding the TBTO chemical leak into Lough Neagh; what investigations have been made to determine any effects on eels or fish stocks in the lough or on water supplies; and what action the Government are taking in this matter.

Mr. Needham: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

European Year of the Environment

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement outlining what plans relating to aspects of Government responsibilities in Northern Ireland have been drawn up with reference to European Year of the Environment.

Mr. Needham: I shall repy to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

AIDS

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) whether he has any plans to arrange for staff of his Department to be screened for antibodies to human immunodeficiency virus;

(2) whether any current or former staff of his Department have been found to have developed AIDS or antibodies to HIV;

(3) what steps he has taken to ensure that staff of his Department are warned about those homosexual and other activities which are deemed to involve a high risk of AIDS infection.

Mr. Needham: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Power Stations (Lignite Supplies)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with British Petroleum Coal about the cost and supply of lignite to power stations in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: The Department of Economic Development is currently examing proposals for the construction of new generating capacity in Northern Ireland, which could be based on lignite, and has a responsibility for licensing the mining of lignite. It is therefore in close contact with the development of plans by British Petroleum Coal to mine lignite and the progress of discussions on price and other terms of supply.

Power Station, Coolkeeragh

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to authorise the construction of a coal-fired power station at Coolkeeragh in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: There are currently no plans to authorise the construction of a coal-fired power station at Coolkeeragh. Consideration is being given to a number of options for new generating capacity which will be required in the mid-1990s. These include coal or dual oil/coal-fired plant at Kilroot, interconnection with Scotland and lignite-fired power station.

Power Stations (Coal Supplies)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with British Coal about the cost and supply of coal to power stations in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: Completion of the Kilroot power station as a coal-fired or dual coal/oil-fired station is one of the options currently being considered for new generating capacity in Northern Ireland. In view of this, my officials are in discussion with the Department of Energy and British Coal on the subject of future coal prices.

Kilroot Power Station

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects the conversion of Kilroot phase I to be complete and the power station to be back in service.

Mr. Viggers: It is expected that Kilroot phase I will be recommissioned in mid-1989.

Coal Prices

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assumption he has made of the level of coal prices for the next 30 years, in considering the construction of a new power station in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: Completion of the Kilroot power station as a coal-fired or dual coal/oil-fired station is one of the options for future generating capacity in Northern Ireland currently being considered and estimates of coal price movements over the next 30 years will be an important factor in determining the best option. The evaluation will be made on the basis of the best forecasts available to my officials, and the assembly of these forecasts is continuing.

Power Stats (Coal-burning Capacity)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans there are to increase the coal burning capacity of power stations in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: The Kilroot power station is currently being converted from oil to dual oil/coal firing. In addition further coal and dual oil/coal-fired capacity is being considered in the evaluation of options for new generating capacity required in the mid-1990s.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Dairy Inspection

Mr. Best asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food further to his answer of 16 March, Official Report, column 417, to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn about dairy inspection, if he will list in the Official Report the names of the organistions to which the draft guidelines will be sent.

Mr. Gummer: We do not intend to issue draft guidelines on this subject.

Mr. Best asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food further to his answer of 16 March, Official Report, column 417, to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn about dairy inspection, how he calculated the expected number of routine visits at 20,000 for dairy inspection.

Mr. Gummer: The figure of approximately 20,000 routine visits reflects on the one hand the expected number of registered producers and licence holders and on the other hand the average visiting frequencies given in the last sentence of my previous reply.

Monetary Compensatory Amounts

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply on 16 March, Official Report, columns 418-19, what representations he has made to the Republic of Ireland about delays in the payment of monetary compensatory amounts to Northern Ireland farmers; what representations he has received from people in Northern Ireland about these delays; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I am aware of the financial difficulties caused to Northern Ireland traders by the late payment of some United Kingdom MCAs and my officials are currently examining with ROI officials how the situation can be improved. I hope that these discussions will result in payments being made more promptly in future.

Headage Payments

Sir Richard Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which countries in the European Economic Community, other than the United Kingdom, do not impose an upper limit for headage payments under any arrangement comparable to the hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme.

Mr. Gummer: All EC member states, with the exception of Denmark which has no designated less favoured areas, pay allowances corresponding to the United Kingdom's hill livestock compensatory allowances under national schemes. These payments are governed by EC statutory provisions, which include a maximum permitted payment per hectare and per livestock unit and limits per holding in respect of dairy cows. We understand from the European Commission that Belgium, France, Germany, Greece, the Republic of Ireland, Luxembourg, Portugal and Spain have opted to apply ceilings per holding in addition to the mandatory limits.

Intervention Stocks

Mrs. Peacock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will detail the locations, type, quantity and approximate value of common agricultural policy intervention stocks held in the constituency of Batley and Spen.

Mr. Gummer: There are no intervention stocks in Batley and Spen.

Cereal Farmers

Sir Peter Hordern asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average holding of a farmer growing predominantly cereals in the United Kingdom; and how many cereal farmers there are.

Mr. Gummer: At the June 1986 agricultural census ther were 19,600 specialist cereals holdings in the United Kingdom; the average size of these holdings was 102·3 hectares. The total number of all holdings growing cereals was 92,200.

Cereal Production

Sir Peter Hordern asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures have been taken to curb excess production of cereals in the European Economic Community in 1986.

Mr. Gummer: The changes in the cereals regime agreed at the 1986 price fixing reduced the effective level of support to producers by restricting the availability of intervention, tightening intervention quality standards and introducing a 3 per cent. co-responsibility levy.

Intervention Stocks (Cereals)

Sir Peter Hordern asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the value of stocks of cereals held in intervention (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in the European Economic Community; and how many months' supply this represents.

Mr. Gummer: Community intervention stocks of cereals were valued on 30 November 1986 at 2,977 million ecu (£1,967 million), including 791 million ecu (£523 million) for stocks in the United Kingdom. These stocks are equivalent to approximately 40 days supply for the Community of 12.

Honey

Mr. Livsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he will take to protect British honey producers from unfair competition and the dumping of cheap honey on the domestic market by foreign producers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Imports of honey from third countries are subject to a 27 per cent. duty under the European Community's common external tariff and are subject to the Honey Regulations 1976 which implement directive 74/409/EEC and set health standards for imports. Over the last four years, home production of natural honey has averaged less than 3,000 tonnes annually against consumption of over 20,000 tonnes.

Action on unfair competition and dumping is the responsibility of the European Commission. Where United Kingdom interests are injured, the unfair trade unit of the Department of Trade and Industry works closely with them in ensuring the necessary evidence is presented to the Commission.

Beekeepers

Mr. Livsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to assist beekeepers in the United Kingdom by the provision of sugar from European Economic Community stockpiles for winter feed for hives.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No. The European Community does not normally hold stockpiles of sugar. A decision on whether or not to introduce a scheme to provide surplus European Community sugar to beekeepers would be primarily a matter for the European Commission. However, previous Community schemes to provide subsidised sugar to beekeepers have not proved cost-effective: they have resulted in little increase in sugar consumption, high unit administrative costs and have not been popular with our beekeepers because of the denaturing of the sugar necessary to prevent abuse.

Food Aid

Mr. Pike asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many instances have occurred where supplies of surplus European Economic Community food being made available for free distribution have been found on sale in retail shops; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will discuss the distribution arrangments for European Economic Community butter with the voluntary organisations which have been responsible for its distribution in Birmingham.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Members as soon as possible.

Farmers

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which of the various measures which he introduced in February 1987 and March 1987 will be of help to small farmers in north Norfolk.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It is of course up to individual farmers, whatever their size or location, to decide how to adapt their businesses to the changes ahead as a result of the reform of the CAP. However, the package we announced offers the industry a number of promising new opportunities which individual farmers may wish to consider in the light of their own circumstances. The measures to encourage alternative use of agricultural land and to assist diversification are described in the set of documents published by the Government on 10 March and entitled "Farming and Rural Enterprise". Copies are available from the Vote Office.

Food (Colouring Regulations)

Mrs. McCurley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to publish the Food Advisory Committee's report on its "Review of the Colouring Matter in Food Regulations 1973"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The report has been published today and we have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

This report contains some very important recommendations which will require careful consideration. Implementation of a number of the recommendations would require amendment to EC legislation and we will be discussing these with our European partners as appropriate. We consider, however, that three of the recommendations which concern restrictions on the use of colours in food are amenable to early action. Accordingly, we intend shortly to issue proposals for legislation:

(i) to put into regulations the present voluntary agreement with the industry not to use added colours in foods specially prepared for babies and young children with the exception of three colours which are also vitamin sources;

(ii) to remove yellow 2G from the permitted list of colours, and

(iii) to prevent the use of methyl violet for the marking of the rinds of citrus fruits.

We are seeking comments on the committee's other recommendations, in particular the committee's proposals to reduce the levels of use of colours in food by setting maximum levels of use, and will consider further action when we have assessed the comments received.

North Sea Fisheries (Disease Levels)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the numbers of marine vertebrate fish sampled in 1983, 1984 and 1985 with the specific objective of monitoring the disease levels in the populations present in the North Sea; and if he will list the species involved.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 23 March 1987, c. 70]: The numbers and species of fish sampled by the Fisheries Departments with the specific objective of monitoring the disease levels in the populations in the North sea were:

	1983	1984	1985
Dabs	984	1,017	1,399
Plaice	63	112	102
Haddock	14,314	6,260	2,155
Cod	506	309	622
	15,867	7,698	4,278

The reduction in the number of haddock examined results from a refinement of the sampling procedures which means that fewer fish are required to achieve the same degree of statistigal accuracy for the diseases under investication.

CIVIL SERVICE

Payroll Giving

95. Mr. Richard Shepherd asked the Minister for the Civil Service what plans he has to promote payroll giving within the Management and Personnel Office.

Mr. Luce: We are moving quickly to set up a scheme to cover MPO and other Departments paid through the Chessington payroll centre. The MPO staff journal will shortly publish an article describing the scheme and full details will be sent to every staff member as soon as they are agreed.

Clerical Staff (Qualifications)

Mr. Pawsey asked the Minister for the Civil Service whether he will make a statement about the requirement for educational qualifications for clerical staff in the Civil Service.

Mr. Luce: Recruitment of clerical staff is carried out by individual Government Departments. Selection for interview on the basis of educational qualifications is the most commonly used method though selection may also be made by clerical test or clerical experience. The Cabinet Office (MPO) is currently carrying out a review of the entry requirements and selection methods for these grades.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Servants (Advice to Ministers)

100. Mr. Alton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what regulations govern the giving of tax advice to Ministers by civil servants.

Mr. Norman Lamont: There are no special regulations. Ministers have the same rights as other taxpayers to satisfy themselves that their tax affairs are dealt with correctly and in accordance with the law.

Taxation

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing his estimate of the amount payable this year to overseas residents by way of rent, interest and dividends, respectively, together with the amount liable to tax at the standard rate.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The balance of payments accounts indicate interest and dividends paid to overseas residents in 1986, net of United Kingdom taxes, totalled £39·8 billion. Of this total, £2·8 billion is estimated to have been by way of dividends and the remaining £37 billion in the form of interest. Estimates for 1987 are not available. Separate figures for rent are not available.

Under the imputation system of corporation tax, the shareholders' liability to basic rate income tax on dividends paid by United Kingdom companies is regarded as met by the advance corporation tax payable by the company in respect of the distributions made by it. The amount of interest paid to non-residents and liable to basic rate tax is not known.

Personal Incomes

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table for each year since 1957-58 showing the tax-free income for each of a single person, a single-wage married couple, a two-wage married couple and single-wage couples with each of one, two, three and four children, as a percentage of average male earnings in October each year.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Before 1976-77, child support was given through taxable family allowances and child tax allowances. From 1976-77 onwards, the tax allowances and family allowances were phased out and replaced by non-taxable child benefit. In order to allow for this change, the table gives the level of earnings at which net liability to tax arises after deducting child benefit from tax payments. These "break-even points" are given as a percentage of financial year average male manual earnings. I regret that it is not possible to provide the information as a percentage of average earnings in October of each year.

Pension Fund Contributions (Tax Relief)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the period before 1979 and each year since, the estimated number and value of single premium type contributions to pension and other funds which benefit from a measure of tax relief on income and capital gains, together with the estimated cost to the Exchequer in the next financial year.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that this information is not available.

Interest Rates

Mr. Wigley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the average base interest rates for each quarter of the last even years in the United Kingdom, together with corresponding figures for West Germany, Holland, Austria and Switzerland for the same period.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information requested for the United Kingdom is set out in the table. I regret that comparable data for base rates are not available for the other countries.

Civil Service Unions

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what details the Civil Service unions have provided him with concerning their latest round of industrial action.

Mr. Brooke: None. Of the six Civil Service unions currently seeking their members' views on the terms of the 1987 pay offer, only one (the SCPS) is recommending industrial action.

Public Expenditure

Sir David Price asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, following his Budget proposals and the Government's expenditure plans for 1987-88, what percentage of the gross domestic product will be represented by public expenditure, taxation and the public sector borrowing requirement, respectively in 1987-88; and how these percentages compare with similar figures for 1978-79.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Inland Revenue Office, Cumbernauld

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the present staffing establishment is for the Inland Revenue office at Cumbernauld, and the projected establishment for each of the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Inland Revenue (Lawyers)

Mr. Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the complement of lawyers in the Inland Revenue; how many of these posts are unfilled; and what percentage of lawyers in post have been in the Civil Service for five years or more.

Mr. Lawson: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Customs and Excise (Lawyers)

Mr. Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the complement of lawyers in the Customs and Excise; how many of these posts are unfilled; and what percentage of lawyers in post have been in the Civil Service for five years or more.

Mr. Lawson: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Growth and Manufacturing Output

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been (a) the average rate of growth for the United Kingdom and (b) the average rate of growth in manufacturing output in the United Kingdom for the period 1980 to 1986; and what are the comparable figures in the other members of the G7 group.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Companies (Depreciation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1957 the amount set aside by industrial and commercial companies out of profits for depreciation and the amount spent on new plant and equipment.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is his estimate of the yield of an increase of 1 percentage point in the rate of corporation tax at the present rate of profitability, all other things remaining unchanged;

(2) what information he has about the rate of corporation tax in or equivalent company taxes in other industrial countries;

(3) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing his forecast of the increase in revenue from corporation tax and advance corporation tax in the current year and in the next financial year; and if he will provide separate figures for (a) North sea oil and gas companies, (b) other industrial and commercial companies and (c) financial companies and institutions.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date for 1986 and 1987-88 the information in his answer dated 25 July 1986, Official Report, column 671, concerning losses and allowances for corporation tax, including figures for advance corporation tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Updated estimates of losses and allowances will not be available until later this year. No reliable estimates of surplus ACT are available.

North Sea Oil

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether on the same basis as table 5.1 in the 1986 edition of the United Kingdom national accounts, he will publish in the Official Report separate figures for North sea oil companies showing tax paid on profits due abroad and tax paid on other income.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the North sea oil companies an appropriation account in the same form as the table on page 173 of the 1987 annual supplement to "Economic Trends".

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is not available.

Company Taxation

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1957-58, 1967-68, 1977-78 and the latest financial year for which figures are available the total amount of tax paid by companies and the components, including the amounts deducted by way of tax on dividends, selective employment tax, national insurance contributions and national insurance surcharges, together with a forecast for the outturn in the current financial year and a forecast for the next financial year on the basis of profits earned to date.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Manufacturing Industry (Profits)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1957 trading profits of manufacturing industry as a percentage of total profits for all enterprises on (a) a gross basis and (b) net of tax and all allowances and relief.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the years 1975, 1979 and 1985 the information given in tables 11.5 and 11.6 of the 1986 edition of the United Kingdom national accounts in terms of 1980 prices;

(2) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the years 1975, 1979 and 1985 the information for all fixed assets in table 10.3 of the 1986 edition of the United Kingdom national accounts in terms of 1980 prices.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Overseas Investment

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for table 13.4 of the 1986 edition of the United Kingdom national accounts a division for the year 1975, 1979 and 1985 between manufacturing and other industrial and commercial companies for overseas securities, for overseas direct and other investment in the United Kingdom, and for direct and other investment abroad; and if he will specify the amount of direct investment in each direction accounted for by retained profits.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Double Taxation Relief

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the effect of an increase in the rate of corporation tax on double taxation relief on the overseas earnings of company profits; and if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the amount of double taxation relief in the latest year for which information is available, the amount of tax on which relief was given, and the change in relief consequent on a one per cent. increase in corporation tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Domestic Credit

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the amount by which domestic credit expanded in each of the years 1983 to 1986 and the increase in each year as a percentage of sterling M3 at the beginning of the year.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Statistics on domestic credit expansion were discontinued in June 1983. A note in the Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin in that month explained why they were no longer relevant to the United Kingdom financial environment.

Tax Exemption

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the saving to the Exchequer in 1987-88 of ending the exemption for life assurance, pension and other funds of (a) income tax and (b) capital gains tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 25 March 1987, c. 213]: The available information is as follows. These figures represent the estimated direct revenue effects of the reliefs on tax liabilities in 1987-88, taking the level of contributions that arise given the existence of the reliefs. The figures cannot therefore be interpreted as indicating the tax yield which might result from a change in the tax rules, as no account has been taken of changes in levels and methods of provision for retirement that might occur following such changes.

	Estimated direct revenue cost 1987-88 (£ million)
Life assurance premium relief	510
Retirement annuity premium relief	410
Employees' contributions to occupational pension schemes allowed as a deduction for income tax purposes	1350
Employers' contributions to occupational pension schemes not treated as taxable benefits in kind in the hands of the employees	2,300
Relief on investment income of occupational pension funds (assuming relief at the basic rate)	4,000

Note:

Costs of reliefs for pension contributions and investment income of pension funds cannot be aggregated as this would involve a degree of multiple taxation. No offsetting reductions are made to allow for tax liability arising on pensions paid out.

The above figures all represent income tax costs. I regret that no estimate is available of the cost of exempting capital gains derived by occupational pension schemes or by life offices as part of their pension business.

Fringe Benefits (Taxation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing his estimate for 1986-87 and his forecast for 1987-88 of taxable fringe benefits on the same basis as that shown in table 5.5 of the latest issue of Social Trends.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 25 March 1987, c. 213]: The information given in table 5.5 of Social Trends 17 relates to 1983-84, and this is the latest year for which such detailed information is available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing his estimate for 1987-88 the number of recipients and the scale charge for taxable fringe benefits for directors and higher paid employees in the case of cars, free fuel and private medical insurance.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 25 March 1987, c. 214]: Forecasts of the number of recipients and taxable value of benefits in 1987-88 are given in the table. These forecasts are based on projections from 1983-84, the latest year for which information is available, and are therefore subject to revision.

Benefit provided by employer	Number of directors and higher paid employees receiving the benefit (thousands)	Taxable value of benefits[1] (£ million)
Cars for private use	1,150	850
Free fuel for private use	700	450
Private medical insurance	650	130

[1] The estimates of taxable value of cars and free fuel are calculated from the scale charges for those benefits; the taxable value for private medical insurance reflects the costs to employers of providing this benefit.

Blind Persons

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated cost in Wales for 1987-88 of the increased relief for blind persons.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 25 March 1987, c. 215]: About 45,000 blind people in the United Kingdom will benefit from the increased allowance at a cost of about £2 million. Information readily available centrally does not allow a reliable estimate to be provided of the effect on taxpayers in Wales.

Budget Statement

Mr. Hancock asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of printing and distributing the Budget statement at railway stations on 17 March; and what was the income from the sale of these pamphlets.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 25 March 1987, c. 216]: Summaries of the Budget were put on sale at Waterloo station on 17 March, price 20p, at an estimated cost of around £50. This was an experiment to test the market for such a summary undertaken in response to a recommendation by the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee that the Treasury, together with HMSO, should look into the possibility of further promotion of the Red Book and a perhaps revised Budget supplement to the Economic Progress Report. The income from sales was around £90, which it was agreed should be retained by the vendor for handling the experiment.

Benefits

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the receipts in 1987-88 from the taxation of unemployment benefit and all supplementary benefits; and what is his estimate of the gross and net cost of a 10 per cent. increase in benefit in each case.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 27 March 1987, c. 307]: Supplementary benefit is only taxable when paid to the unemployed and the families of strikers. Estimates of the yield from taxing these supplementary benefit payments and unemployment benefit are as follows:

	£ million
1982-83	[1]300
1983-84	375

	£ million
1984-85	400
1985-86	400
1986-87	400
1987-88	375

[1] Unemployment benefits became taxable on 5 July 1982.

These estimates are based on national amounts of benefits paid to the unemployed and information about the individual circumstances of the unemployed respondents to the 1984 and 1985 family expenditure surveys. They may be revised when later information becomes available.

The costs of increasing the benefits by 10 per cent. in 1987-88 are estimated to be as follows:

United Kingdom

	Gross cost £ million	Net cost after taxation and savings in other benefits £ million

Child Benefit

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will provide estimates for child benefit costs on the same basis for 1987-88 as in the figures given in his answer of 25 July, Official Report, at column 667.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 26 March 1987, c. 268]: The information in the table, as with my previous reply of 25 July 1986, at columns 667-68, relates to Great Britain. The first line gives the level of child benefit on a revenue neutral basis if it were made taxable.

Personal Incomes (Statistics)

Mr. Meacher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the increase in real personal disposable income each year since 1960; and what comparable information he has regarding France, Germany, United States of America, and Japan.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to the reply, 26 March 1987, c. 268-69]: Information about annual percentage changes in United Kingdom real personal disposable income is published in table 3.16 of United Kingdom national accounts (the Central Statistical Office Blue Book) which is available in the Library of the House of Commons. To afford a comparison with the other countries specified the definition of real personal disposable income used in the United Kingdom national accounts has had to be slightly modified in the table that follows. Comparable information is not readily available for years before 1973.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Government Data Network

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current volume of data items exchanged between his Department and the Inland Revenue; and what are the expected future volumes if the Government data network is fully implemented.

Mr. Lyell: Approximately 35 million data items are currently exchanged between the Department and Inland Revenue each year in the process of the collection of national insurance contributions and income tax. In addition, details of about 5 million pension rates and awards, and approximately 3 million items relating to pensioners working and paying income tax are provided by the Department to Inland Revenue. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 26 January at columns 90-91 for details of the possible use of the Government data network for this exchange in the future.

Benefits

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how he determines what constitutes a temporary absence when deciding on claims made under the Social Security Benefit (Persons Abroad) Regulations 1975 2(2).

Mr. Lyell: The social security Acts and regulations do not define what constitutes a temporary absence from Great Britain. This is a matter for the independent adjudicating authorities set up under the Acts, having regard to the particular circumstances of each individual case. The Secretary of State has no power to intervene or vary their decisions.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many claims made under the Social Security Benefit (Persons Abroad) Regulations 1975 for (a) sickness benefit, (b) severe disablement allowance and (c) invalidity benefit, were rejected between 1981 and 1985 on the grounds that their absence was not deemed to be a temporary absence from Great Britain;

(2) how many claims made under the Social Security Benefit (Persons Abroad) Regulations 1975 for (a) sickness benefit, (b) severe disablement allowance and (c) invalidity benefit, were rejected between 1981 and 1985 on the grounds that their absence was not deemed to be for the specific purpose of being treated for the incapacity which commenced before the claimant sought to leave Great Britain;

(3) how many claims made under the Social Security Benefit (Persons Abroad) Regulations 1975, as amended, were successful on appeal between 1981 and 1985 for (a) sickness benefit, (b) severe disablement allowance and (c) invalidity benefit;

(4) how many claims made under the Social Security Benefit (Persons Abroad) Regulations 1975, as amended, were successful between 1981 and 1986 for (a) sickness benefit, (b) severe disablement allowance and (c) invalidity benefit;

(5) whether he will provide a breakdown by country of intended destination for successful claimants of social security benefit under the Social Security Benefit (Persons Abroad) Regulations 1975, as amended;

(6) whether he will provide a breakdown by country of intended destination of unsuccessful claimants of social security benefit under the Social Security Benefit (Persons Abroad) Regulations 1975, as amended.

Mr. Lyell: The information requested is not readily available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims have been made under the Social Security Benefit (Persons Abroad) Regulations 1975, as amended, between 1981 and 1986.

Mr. Lyell: The number of claims made under the Social Security Benefit (Persons Abroad) Regulations 1975, as amended, between 1981 and 1986 is as follows:

	Retirement pension[1]	Widows benefit[1]	Injury benefit[2]	Disablement benefit[2]
1981	22,660	2,443	398	838
1982	22,076	2,076	303	799
1983	25,342	2,459	[3]316	813
1984	28,435	2,531	34	591
1985	33,757	2,453	—	717
1986	39,228	2,766	—	880

[1] The figures in these two columns refer to claims made by people in non-European Community and non-reciprocal countries and countries with which we have partial agreements. (Australia, New Zealand, Canada and United States of America). EC countries and countries with which we have reciprocal agreements, providing for payment of pension increases, are excluded as their claims are not made under the 1975 persons abroad regulations. The figures do not include people who get benefit in the United Kingdom who then go to live abroad.

[2] The figures in these two columns are figures for the whole world and it is not possible to separate out claims made by people in EC countries and countries with which we have agreements.

[3] Injury benefit was abolished in April 1983. The figures for 1983 and 1984 include late claims.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims have ben made under the Social Security Benefit (Persons Abroad) Regulations 1975, as amended, for (a) sickness benefit, (b) severe disablement allowance and (c) invalidity benefit.

Mr. Lyell: The Number of claims to sickness benefit, invalidity benefit and severe disablement allowance made under the Social Security Benefit (Persons Abroad) Regulations 1975, as amended, for the period 1977 to 1986 is as follows:

	Number
1977	10,221
1978	16,868
1979	13,803
1980	15,012
1981	15,031
1982	14,402
1983	10,939
1984	8,792
1985	8,777
1986	6,668

Figures for 1975 to 1976, and separate figures for each benefit, are not available.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list in the Official Report the estimated level of uptake of all means-tested benefits and the average level of payments forgone by the different claimant groups as a result of non-uptake of benefits;

(2) what is the most recent estimate of the number of people who lose out on means-tested benefits as a result of non-uptake.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 9 March 1987, c. 73]: The latest take-up estimates for supplementary benefit, including weekly amounts unclaimed, related to 1983 and are contained in my reply on 30 October 1986 at columns 231-34.

Estimates of take-up of family income supplement (FIS) for 1981-82 indicate that approximately half of those entitled claimed. Approximately 130,000 families left average weekly amounts of £8.30 unclaimed.

Updated estimates for FIS, and initial estimates for housing benefit, are expected to be published soon.

Estimates of take-up of welfare milk under low-income schemes indicate that approximately 7 per cent. of those entitled claimed in 1981. There are insufficient data available to calculate reliable take-up for the low-income schemes which provide help with National Health Service charges and travelling expenses.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make the gathering of information on ethnic origins compulsory, and publish the percentage of entrants to his Department who failed to respond to the ethnic origins questionnaire.

Mr. Lyell: Surveys of the ethnic origin of staff in post and new entrants to the Department have been carried out in agreement with the Council of Civil Service Unions on the basis of voluntary self classification. There are no plans at present to change to a compulsory system. However, we have introduced a reminder procedure for our new entrant surveying which has increased our response rate and we continue to investigate ways of further improving our data base.

The non-response rate in our new entrant survey was 30 per cent., a figure which should reduce as the staff-in-post surveys progress. We hope to introduce a comprehensive programme of applicant monitoring and our pilot exercise showed a 15 per cent. non-response rate.

All the arrangements for ethnic origin monitoring are kept under review jointly by the Management and Personnel Office, Departments and the Council of Civil Service Unions. The objective is to increase the effectivenesss of the implementation of equal opportunity policy.

The results of the surveys will be published. Reports on the first phase of recruitment monitoring and the London and south-east and east Anglia staff-in-post surveys will be published later this year.

British Pensioners Association

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from or on behalf of the British Pensioners Association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lyell: We have received a number of letters from or on behalf of the British Pensioners Association (Canada) asking for pensions payable in Canada to be increased.

The Government accept the case in principle for paying annual increases to United Kingdom pensioners living in Canada. However, we do not have the resources to pay for all the improvements we should like to make to our social security system. We are therefore unlikely to be able to increase pensions in Canada in the foreseeable future.

Housing Benefit (Departmental Office)

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department's office at 206 Kennington Park road will deal with housing benefit supplement cases which have been outstanding since 1984.

Mr. Lyell: It is expected that all of these cases will have been dealt with by 31 March.

Local Offices, Peckham

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services pursuant to his reply of 19 February 1987, Official Report, column 820, which other areas from Department of Health and Social Security offices other than the areas administered by the Blenheim grove Department of Health and Social Security office will be covered by the new Department of Health and Social Security office planned on the Odeon cinema site in Peckham.

Mr. Lyell: Plans for the area to be administered by the new office are still under consideration.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the figures for each successive month from June 1986 to January 1987 for the amount of post at the Camberwell office of his Department in Blenheim grove not yet associated with files, outstanding postal claims, single payment claims and other assessment work.

Mr. Lyell: The work outstanding in the Department's Camberwell office is as follows:

	3 June 1986	1 July 1986	29 July 1986	26 August 1986	23 September 1986	21 October 1986	18 November 1986	16 December 1986	13 January 1987
Post unlinked with files for two or more days	1,640	2,282	2,802	1,938	1,166	1,165	928	1,191	985
Postal claims outstanding	486	424	710	836	764	651	539	389	446

Outstanding cases awaiting review of assessment	799	363	1,749	1,282	547	181	300	259	357

.. Figures unavailable.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services pursuant to his reply of 19 February 1987, Official Report, column 820, what steps are being taken to reduce the amount of post not yet associated with files at the Blenheim grove Department of Health and Social Security office.

Mr. Lyell: Additional administrative assistants, the grade responsible for associating post with the relevant files, have been recruited on a casual basis. There are currently 25 in post against a complement of 19.

Sickness Benefit

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have been disqualified from receiving sickness benefit under regulation 17(1)(d) of the unemployment sickness and invalidity benefit regulations in each of the last three years.

Mr. Lyell: The information requested is not readily available. It could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Social Fund

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek the views of voluntary organisations providing residential and other services for supplementary benefit recipients as part of the consultation process on the proposed social fund.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) on 25 March at column 211.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how the social fund budgets to be issued to local social security offices in April 1988 will differ from the cash limits which are to be introduced when there is sufficient experience of the operation of the fund.

Mr. Major: The budgets will be specific to individual offices, and each office will be required to keep spending within its budget. Within the total amount available in the fund at any time, however, there will be contingency arrangements at national level to meet unforeseen demands while totally unexpected increases in expenditure at the end of a year can, if necessary, be accommodated by running down the standing balance in the fund. A cash limit, when introduced, will apply to the aggregate of voted money paid into the fund in any financial year.

AIDS

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he has any plans to arrange for staff of his Department to be screened for antibodies to human immunodeficiency virus;

(2) whether any current or former staff of his Department have been found to have developed AIDS or antibodies to HIV;

(3) what steps he has taken to ensure that staff of his Department are warned about those homosexual and other activities which are deemed to involved a high risks of AIDS infection.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have replies as soon as possible.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether his Department is aware of any reported case in Europe or the United States of America in which the AIDS virus has been transmitted from one sibling to another through non-sexual contact in young children; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he is aware of any published paper which reports on the rate of occurrence of in which the AIDS virus has been transmitted from a young child to a parent through non-sexual contact; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: There is one published report of the putative transmission of HIV between two siblings in West Germany. In that case the authors speculated that a bite might have been responsible. There is a published report from the United States of America of a mother who is presumed to have become infected while nursing her child. The method of transmission was not known but the report noted the mother did not wear gloves while taking part in nursing procedures that involved direct contact with blood. To put these isolated case reports in context, it should be noted that studies of large numbers of close non-sexual contacts of AIDS cases and HIV carriers have not revealed casual transmission of the infection.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he is aware of any published paper which reports on the rate of occurrence of cell-free AIDS virus in the saliva of AIDS-infected men in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he is aware of any published electron micrographs which demonstrate the presence of the mature AIDs virus in saliva; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We are unaware of any published papers on cell-free or cell-associated AIDS virus in the saliva of infected men in the United Kingdom.

There is one publication in "Science 1984", volume 226, page 447, that showed an electron micrograph of mature AIDS virus obtained from the cultured saliva of a patient with AIDS-related complex. I am advised that with the methodology used in this study it would not be possible to determine if these viral particles were produced in vitro during the preparation of the specimen for electron microscopy, or were present in the native saliva. In any case, there is no evidence that saliva containing virus whether cell-free or cell-associated is capable of being infectious to humans.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement outlining the published data upon which his Department has based its conclusion that sharing the toothbrush of a person with AIDS can transmit the AIDS virus, but that kissing cannot.

Mr. Newton: There is no evidence to suggest that the sharing of a toothbrush has ever led to transfer of HIV infection. However, it is well known that toothbrushes can draw blood and it is possible that contaminated toothbrush fibres could directly innoculate the gums of another user. Recommendations against the sharing of toothbrushes were made because of this possible risk. The arguments against transfer of the AIDS virus during kissing are given in a letter from the Director of the Public Health Laboratory Service in the British Medical Journal on 14 February 1987, page 446.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what advice he has received concerning (a) the presence of HIV in African bed bugs and (b) its ability to survive drying for seven days at room termperature; and what implications this advice has for the health education programme on AIDS.

Mr. Newton: Although last year a report demonstrated under laboratory conditions the presence of HIV in bedbugs one hour after a feed on blood virus mixture, I am advised that there is no epidemiological or entomological evidence at present that infection can be transmitted by this or any other insect. We therefore do not propose to alter the health education campaign.

Regarding the question of the survival of the virus on drying, under highly arfificial laboratory conditions concentrated material prepared from viral cultures has been found to contain very small amounts of active virus after seven days. It is highly unlikely that a dose of virus from natural sources, and capable of being infectious, would survive in this way but nevertheless we recommend sterilisation for any implements that could be contaminated and which might transfer virus from one person into another. This advice is already part of our health education programme for the public and for health professionals.

Mesothelioma

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of awards of industrial death benefit for mesothelioma in 1984 and 1985; and when he expects the 1986 figures to be available.

Mr. Major: The following table shows the numbers of awards of industrial death benefit for mesothelioma in 1984, 1985 and 1986:

Year	Number of awards
1984	139
1985	196
1986	247

Marsden Hospital, Burnley

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the reason for the recent closure of Peerplay ward at Marsden hospital, Burnley; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale health authority is responsible for managing Marsden hospital. The hon. Member may wish therefore to address his inquiry to the chairman of that authority.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give for each district health authority in England in 1985 (a) the total number of beds in non-psychiatric National Health Service hospitals, (b) the total number of beds in private hospitals, nursing homes and clinics registered under section 23 of the Registered Nursing Homes Act 1984 and (c) the number of beds in private institutions expressed as a percentage of the number of non-psychiatric hospital beds;

(2) if he will give for each district health authority in England in 1985 (a) the total number of beds per 100,000 population in institutions registered under the Nursing Homes Act 1984, (b) the total number of beds for care of the elderly (those over 65 years requiring long-stay nursing care) in institutions registered under the Nursing Homes Act 1984 and (c) the number of beds for the care of the elderly per 100,000 population aged over 65 years in institutions registered under the Nursing Homes Act 1984.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as can be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost as soon as possible.

Road Accidents

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate the age groups for whom road accidents comprise the leading cause of death.

Mrs. Currie: In 1985, the latest year for which date are available, the only age-group for whom road accidents form the leading cause of death, using the grouping of ages and causes in the Chief Medical Officer's annual report "On the State of the Public Health for the year 1985" (HMSO) is the 15 to 34 age group for each sex. (For the 1 to 14 age group in each sex road accidents are the second leading cause). The information is shown in the table.

Mersey Regional Health Authority

Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give the number of urgent cases awaiting admission to hospitals within the Mersey regional health authority at the latest date for which figures are available;

(2) if he will state the number of women waiting for gynaecological treatment in the Mersey regional health authority.

Mr. Newton: The latest information available centrally is included in a bound volume of the hospital waiting lists for health authorities in England at 30 September 1986, copies of which have been placed in the Library. For current information, the hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the Mersey regional health authority.

Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state the number of beds available for patients within the Mersey regional health authority for the calendar years 1985 and 1986.

Mrs. Currie: The latest information available centrally is included in the booklet "Hospital Statistics — Form SH3, National and Regional Summaries for 1985", copies of which have been placed in the Library. For more recent information the hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the Mersey regional health authority.

Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to reduce hospital waiting lists in the Mersey regional health authority.

Mr. Newton: Mersey regional health authority will receive £1·35 million in 1987-88 from the national £25 million waiting list fund. This will allow hospitals in the region to treat over 7,700 additional waiting list cases through 19 projects. Full details of these projects have been placed in the Library. The improvements planned with the help of the waiting list fund are in addition to measures already being taken within the region to improve waiting lists and times from within existing resources.

Health Screening

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is encouraging family practitioner committees to provide screening activities in spheres other than cervical and breast cancer.

Mr. Newton: In management guidance, performance reviews and annual scrutinies, family practitioner committees have been encouraged to collaborate with the relevant health authorities in developing joint policies on health promotion activities.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the circumstances covered by the authority issued in summer 1986 to make ex gratia payments to mobility allowance claimants.

Mr. Major: In March 1986, a judgment by the Court of Appeal overturned a decision of a tribunal of social security commissioners which had held that a medical appeal tribunal could and should consider, in appropriate cases, whether a claimant who was unable to satisfy the conditions for an award of mobility allowance as at the date of claim did satisfy them from a later date. Whilst the legislation was being amended to restore the law to what it was believed to be before the judgment, arrangements were made for extra-statutory payments to be made on the same basis as if awards from a later date were still permissible. As part of the amendment, now in section 71 of the Social Security Act 1986, such payments were put on to a statutory basis by treating them as payments of mobility allowance and by treating the recipients as having been entitled to the allowance for the period the payments were made.

Pensions

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the average basic, graduated and earnings-related retirement pension awarded to women aged 60 years and men aged 65 years respectively, in each year since 1978, including the guaranteed minimum pension for contracted-out employees.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Cold Weather Payments

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the estimated cost of administering cold weather payments for the period January to March 1987, assuming maximum take-up; and how much was spent on publicising these payments;

(2) how many cold weather payments have been made in 1987 in each week for which information is available, to claimants in each of the categories (a) over 65 years, (b) chronically sick or disabled, and (c) with a child under the age of two years.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Hospital (Norwich)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what basis four sites considered for the Norwich second district general hospital were turned down due to the high quality of the agricultural land; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The Department is currently examining the submission put forward by the East Anglian regional health authority for a second district general hospital for Norwich. A final decision has not yet been reached but the agricultural value of possible sites is one of a range of relevant factors.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the preferred area for the Norwich second district general hospital was defined when six sites for the hospital were rejected on the grounds that they were outside that area; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: This is essentially a question for the health authority concerned and my hon. Friend may wish to approach the chairman of the East Anglian regional health authority.

Placentas (Disposal)

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what relationships are established between National Health Service maternity hospitals and private sector companies and institutes regarding the disposal of placentas; what is the cost to the National Health Service of such arrangements; and what is the procedure for informing patients.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Whooping Cough

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what evidence is available to his Department regarding the connection between whooping cough and permanent severe brain damage in children.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 13 March 1987, c. 327]: The Swansea research unit of the Royal College of General Practitioners studied 2,295 cases of whooping cough in the period 1977-79 and identified two children with inflammation of the brain, one of whom died. The whooping cough report published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office in 1981 noted 15 previously normal children who had recently contracted whooping cough. One died, one was left with major neurological problems and a third had a mild speech defect 12 months after the illness. The remaining 12 children were normal by that stage. In the United States, the journal "Mortality and Morbidity Weekly Reports" on 12 October 1984 reported that among 3,159 children who had whooping cough in 1982 and 1983, 1·9 per cent. developed convulsions and 0·3 per cent. inflammation of the brain.

Other references include "Infectious Diseases" by A. M. Ramsey and R. T. D. Edmond (1978) and "Infectious Diseases" by A. B. Christie (3rd edition 1980). Both these publications quote further examples and comment on the potentially serious outlook for children who develop convulsions in the course of whooping cough.

Board and Lodging Claimants

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer on Monday 9 March, if he will give the number of children belonging to the 6,000 claimants who received supplementary board and lodging payments, and who were said to have dependent children.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 16 March 1987, c. 409]: In December 1984, an estimated 10,000 dependent children were in families receiving supplementary benefit board and lodging payments.

Immersion Hypothermia

Mr. David Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what research work is being funded by public resources in the United Kingdom on the subject of immersion hypothermia in drowning.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 24 March 1987, c. 121]: I understand that the Ministry of Defence is investigating all stages of immersion, including cold shock and short and long term immersion, as part of a continuing programme. It is also studying mathematical modelling techniques for predicting survival in cold water.

I further understand that the Medical Research Council, which is the main Government-funded agency for the promotion of medical and related biological research in this country and receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science, has been supporting research into biochemical and physiological studies on accidental and occupational hypothermia and other effects of heat and cold which could prove relevant to the study of immersion hypothermia.

ENVIRONMENT

Unleaded Petrol

101. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the extent to which unleaded petrol is now available in service stations.

Mr. Waldegrave: I understand from the United Kingdom Petroleum Industry Association that there are now 211 service stations selling unleaded petrol in the United Kingdom. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's provision for a 5p duty differential has removed the remaining price barrier and I expect to see a major expansion of unleaded petrol outlets this year.

London Docklands Development Corporation (Houses and Flats)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of houses and flats built on London Docklands Development Corporation owned land were sold for (a) over £40,000 and (b) over £70,000 between July and December 1986.

Mr. John Patten: Details of house sales on LDDC sites to the establishment or the corporation from 1 July 1981 to 31 March 1986 are as follows:

	Per cent.
£40,000 or less	52
Between £40,000 and £100,000	48
£100,000 or more	0·2

Details relating to a £70,000 threshold cannot be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Land Prices

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the present average level of land prices of (a) housing, (b) offices and (c) industry in the following areas (i) the enterprise zone, (ii) the Isle of Dogs outside the enterprise zone, (iii) the urban district council area in Southwark and (iv) the urban district council area in Newham.

Mr. John Patten: Detailed analyses of current land values for specific uses in the London Dockland Development Corporation area are not available. However, open market values for housing land in docklands currently range between £600,000 and £3 million per acre, depending on factors such as size, location and terms of sale.

Inner City Areas

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline future initiatives planned for the residents of inner city areas.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend will shortly be laying before the House orders to establish urban development corporations in the black country, Tyne and Wear and Teesside, in addition to those already existing in London and Liverpool docklands and Trafford park, Greater Manchester.

I will shortly be launching the new urban regeneration grant which will directly support regeneration programmes for larger sites in urban areas under powers contained in the Housing and Planning Act 1986.

The Department is currently considering strategic three-year inner area programmes for 1987-88 to 1989-90 submitted by 57 urban authorities to which over £270 million has been allocated through the urban programme for 1987-88.

Resources for estate action — the Department's initiative to help local authorities tackle the problems of housing estates—will be increased by 50 per cent. to £75 million for 1987-88, enabling over 82,000 dwellings to be renovated.

Rates

Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will meet the London chamber of commerce to discuss the impact of rates on businesses.

Mr. Chope: If the London chamber of commerce asks me to meet it, I shall be happy to do so.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make the gathering of information on ethnic origins compulsory, and publish the percentage of entrants to his Department who failed to respond to the ethnic origins questionnaire.

Mr. Ridley: Surveys of the ethnic origin of staff in post and new entrants to the Civil Service have been carried out in agreement with the Council of Civil Service Unions on the basis of voluntary self-classification. There are no plans at present to change to a compulsory system. However, the Civil Service and the Council of Civil Service Unions are keen to improve the data base and are discussing practical ways in which this can be done.

Of all new entrants to my Department in the period 1 October 1985 to 1 March 1987, 34 per cent. failed to complete an ethnic monitoring questionnaire or gave an invalid response. We shall be sending reminders and this percentage should therefore decrease.

London Boroughs (Funds)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what payments from the former Greater London council and London residuary body funds, including capital transfer, he estimates will be paid to each London borough; what he expects to be the due date for payment; what percentage this represents of each borough's 1986-87 budget; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what payments have been made to each London borough so far of balances of the former Greater London council and London residuary body; when and how much was paid; what percentage this represents of each borough's 1986-87 budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The London residuary body is distributing two kinds of cash to rating authorities in Greater London: the closing revenue balances of the Greater London council, and capital receipts accruing to the LRB, in each case after deducting amounts required for the LRB's own purposes.

The precise method and timing of distribution of revenue balances is a matter for LRB, which estimates that it will distribute £89 million by 31 March 1987. The amounts to be distributed to each London borough are shown, and expressed as a percentage of the recipient council's budgeted total revenue expenditure for 1986-87.

Capital moneys arising in 1986-87 must, so far as possible, be distributed by 31 March 1987, with final adjustments before 30 June 1987, in accordance with the Local Government Reorganisation (Capital Money) (Greater London) Order 1987 (SI No. 118). The LRB estimates that the total amount to be distributed in respect of 1986-87 will be £31·7 million. The provisional sums receivable by each rating authority are shown, and expressed as a percentage of the authority's net capital expenditure forecast for 1986-87 as shown on its capital estimates and commitments return.

Council House Sales

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the sale of council housing to sitting tenants for West Lindsey district council and East Lindsey district council; and what was the percentage of relevant stock existing in April 1980 which has been sold to date.

Mr. Tracey: From April 1980 to December 1986, West Lindsey has reported selling 858 dwellings to sitting tenants, equivalent to 15 per cent. of the council stock in April 1980; East Lindsey has reported 885 sales, equal to 13·5 per cent. of its April 1980 stock.

Greater London

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements exist within his Department, within the central headquarters or in any regional or sub-regional organisation, for dealing with his responsibilities regarding public services or any other function in respect of the Greater London area; and how many full-time equivalent staff are involved in such work.

Dr. Boyson: Almost all aspects of my right hon. Friend's responsibilities affect Greater London, to some degree. In particular, the Department's Greater London regional office has responsibilities for housing, planning, the urban programme, land registers and derelict land, and liaison with the London Docklands Development Corporation and the London residuary body. The Property Services Agency's London region is responsible for the Government's estate in London. Staff in post number 128 and about 3,700 respectively.

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for the Environment with which Departments and non-departmental bodies his Department, and its related non-departmental public bodies, has consulted during 1986-87 in respect of services provided within Greater London; approximately how often such consultations have taken place; and what issues were discussed.

Dr. Boyson: My Department consults as appropriate other Departments and non-departmental public bodies on matters relating to services in London. No central record is kept of these numerous oral and written consultations.

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether there are any proposals to change the arrangements for discharging his Department's responsibilities regarding public services or any other function in respect of the Greater London area during the forthcoming year.

Dr. Boyson: The Secretary of State has no proposals to change the current arrangements.

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the results of his latest analysis of information collected from local authorities under section 56 of the Local Government Act 1985 concerning the costs, savings and other results of the abolition of the Greater London council; and what plans have been made for the regular dissemination of these results.

Dr. Boyson: I refer to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Chope) on 4 February, at column 720, based on returns submitted by authorities under section 56 of the Local Government Act 1985, and joint manpower watch information, as at 30 June 1986. Section 56 returns have not yet been received from all authorities in respect of 30 September 1986. That information will be laid before the House as soon as possible, in accordance with the provisions of the Act. The Local Government Reorganisation (Manpower Information) Regulations 1986 provide for quarterly returns until June 1987 and thereafter for an annual return for March 1988 and March 1989.

Beach Pollution and Water Quality

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the results of his survey into beach pollution required by European Economic Community Directive 76/160 together with water quality information specified in the annex of the regulation.

Mr. Waldegrave: The results of the 1986 survey of bathing water quality are at present being collated. I expect to publish them in the near future.

Ammonia

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effects of increasing levels of ammonia pollution in the United Kingdom on concentrations of sulphate aerosols in the air.

Mr. Waldegrave: In principle, increasing levels of ammonia might be expected to increase concentrations of sulphate aerosols in the air. However, the chemistry of the link is very complex, and there have as yet been no credible quantitative assessments. This is the subject of active research, including work at Harwell laboratory for the Department.

Historic Buildings and Ancient Monuments

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to reply to the report of the Environment Committee on Historic Buildings and Ancient Monuments of January 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend expects to reply to this report (which was published on 18 February) after the Easter recess.

Stonehouse Road, Rugeley

Mr. Hoddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce his decision in respect of the appeal for planning permission to develop land off Stonehouse Road, Rugeley, Staffordshire, planning ref. No.: APP/X3405/A/07/064435.

Mr. Waldegrave: This planning appeal, which was received in the Department on 12 February 1987, is proceeding by the written representations method. This involves the parties in an exchange of statements followed by a visit to the site by the inspector. The site visit is presently being arranged. Because of the objections to the appeal lodged by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the appeal will in accordance with the guidelines published in paragraph 36 of the Government's response to the fifth report from the Environment Committee Session 1985-86, Cm 43, be recovered for the Secretary of State's decision.

I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as the decision is available.

Nursery Nurses

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the salary scale for nursery nurses.

Mr. Chope: The Department has received a number of letters on this subject. The remuneration of nursery nurses, however, is entirely a matter for local authorities.

Chlorofluorocarbon Emissions

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting of the European Economic Community Environment Ministers in Brussels on 20 March in so far as it is related to a proposed freeze on chlorofluorocarbon emissions.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 24 March, at column 134, in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris).

AIDS

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he has any plans to arrange for staff of his Department to be screened for antibodies to human immunodeficiency virus;

(2) whether any current or former staff of his Department have been found to have developed AIDS or antibodies to HIV;

(3) what steps he has taken to ensure that staff of his Department are warned about those homosexual and other activities which are deemed to involve a high risk of AIDS infection.

Mr. Ridley: I shall answer these questions shortly.

Community Charge

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish tables in the Official Report showing in respect of each district and borough in England and Wales at what rateable value the estimated community charge will be equal to the domestic rate bill for one, two and three-adult households, with and without safety nets;

(2) if he will estimate the size of the total safety net provision for England and Wales in the first year of operation of the community charge; how many local authorities will contribute to this provision; how many will receive from it; and which will be the top 10 contributors and recipients;

(3) if he will publish in the Official Report tables relating to the impact of the community charge, showing for each district and borough in England and Wales (a) the average domestic rate bills for 1986-87 and (b) his estimate of the community charge at a taxpayer level on a comparable 1986-87 basis, for one adult, two adult and three-adult households, with safety nets, and without safety nets, showing in each case the difference between rate bills and community charges.

Dr. Boyson: I shall answer these questions shortly.

Urban Development Grant (Bradford)

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the amount of urban development grant granted to Bradford since its inception and the amount it was eligible for, including the current year.

Mr. Tracey: Since the introduction of urban development grant in 1982, a total of £1·74 million has been approved for three projects in Bradford which involve total private sector investment of £4·33 million. No restrictions are placed on the number or size of UDG applications invited local authorities may make in any year.

Squatters

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish any figures that are available centrally on the number of local authority and private dwellings occupied by squatters in inner London boroughs.

Mr. Tracey: Figures on the unlicensed occupation of dwellings ("squatting") are not held centrally.

Trees (Conservation)

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to press for the listing of tree species endangered by commercial logging and all other non-sustainable developments under the convention of international trade and endangered species in order to regulate, and, if necessary, ban, the trade in threatened species.

Mr. Waldegrave: Trade in timber from a number of endangered species of trees is already controlled under the Convention of International Trade in Endangered Species (CITES). My scientific advisers on this matter, the Royal Botanic Gardens, are considering whether further species should be added but at present have insufficient evidence for the United Kingdom to submit proposals to the conference of the CITES parties in July. They are continuing their work and if the evidence so warrants, proposals will be prepared for the next conference in 1989.

Housing

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was (a) the total and (b) the percentage of houses in (i) the private and (ii) the public sector in England which were empty at the latest available date.

Mr. Tracey: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 18 November 1986 at columns 96-98.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Williams asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the complement of lawyers in his Department; how many of these posts are unfilled; and what percentage of lawyers in post have been in the Civil Service for five years or more.

Mr. Ridley: The complement of lawyers in the Department of the Environment is 42. Two of these posts are unfilled. Sixty-one per cent. of the lawyers in post have been in the Civil Service for five years or more.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now answer the question to which a holding reply was given on 21 January, Official Report, column 590, concerning rate support grant.

Mr. Chope: I am planning to answer the hon. Member's question before the Easter recess and will do so by 3 April if possible.

Cost Floor Regulations

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to amend the cost floor regulations made under the Housing Act 1980 according to which any property built after 1974 cannot be sold at less than the cost of building; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey [pursuant to his reply, 27 March; c. 277]: The cost floor cut-off date of 31 March 1974 is reviewed from time to time but there are no current plans to change it.

Housing and Planning Act 1986

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when section 6 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986 will be brought into effect.

Mr. Tracey [pursuant to his reply, 27 March 1987, c. 277]: It is planned to bring section 6 into operation at the same time as the related section 8 (which concerns the preservation of the right to buy on disposal of tenanted property to private sector landlords). The regulations necessary before that section can be brought into force are currently in preparation.

Thamesmead

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when Thamesmead Town Ltd. will take responsibility for the debt attached to Thamesmead.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 27 March 1987, c. 275]: The debt related to Thamesmead will in any event remain with the London residuary body, but Thamesmead Town will be paying a fair price for the property and will relieve the public sector of an onerous future burden.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many officials from his Department are on the board of Thamesmead Town Ltd.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 27 March 1987, c. 275]: One official seconded from the Department is a co-opted member of the board but has no vote.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he plans to publish the auditors' report for 1985-86 and 1986-87 for the London Docklands Development Corporation.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 27 March 1987, c. 275]: The annual report of the auditors of LDDC's accounts are published each year in the corporation's statutory annual report and accounts, which is laid before Parliament shortly before each summer recess.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans the London Docklands Development Corporation has for Pura Foods of Leamouth.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 27 March 1987, c. 275]: I refer the hon. Member to my previous answer on 25 March at column 165.

Urban Programme

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total value of urban programme moneys spent in (a) Greater Manchester, and (b) the City of Manchester (i) at current prices, and (ii) in constant 1987-88 prices for the years 1982-83 to 1987-88 inclusive.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, Friday 27 March 1987, c. 278]: Urban programme resources allocated to the Manchester/Salford partnership from 1982-83 to 1987-88 inclusive, in cash terms and in 1987-88 real terms prices, are shown in the table. Figures are not available centrally for the split of resources between the different partners. The figures shown are outturns for the years 1982-86, estimated outturn for 1986-87, and provisional allocation for 1987-88.

Urban Programme Resources: Manchester/Salford partnership

Bees

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) why he is proposing that the powers under section 74 of the Public Health Act 1961, which permit local authorities to control and eradicate pests, should be extended to bees; and if he will make a statement;

(2) why he described bees as urban pests in his proposals entitled "Air Pollution Control in Great Britain", published in December 1986; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what requests he has had from local authorities seeking additional powers to control and eradicate bees through the extension of the species covered by section 74 of the Public Health Act 1961; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Discussions with local authorities have shown that existing powers have not always been adequate to deal with nuisance caused by certain animals or insects, including swarming bees, in urban areas. In our consultation paper "Air Pollution Control in Great Britain", we have therefore sought views on the proposal that the existing powers of local authorities to control pigeons and certain other birds, in section 74 of the Public Health Act 1961, should be extended to other birds, mammals or insects causing a nuisance, if specified by an order of the local authority. Such an order would be made after consultation and advertisement, and would be subject, if opposed, to confirmation by the Secretary of State. We shall consider carefully the reaction of local authorities and others to all the proposals in the consultation paper, including those relating to nuisance sometimes caused by swarming bees.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why he did not consult or notify the British Beekeepers Association on his proposals to provide local authorities with the power to control and eradicate bees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I regret that the British Beekeepers Association was not among the 420 organisations specifically consulted on wide-ranging proposed changes to air pollution legislation. However, the consultation paper is available to, and comments are welcome from, anyone with an interest in the matters under review. We will carefully consider the views of beekeepers on the proposals relating to bees.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement outlining the policy of Her Majesty's Government on the impact which bees have on the environment.

Mr. Waldegrave: Bees are both economically and ecologically immensely important, especially as pollinators of fodder crops, various fruit crops and many wild plants. But uncontrolled swarms of bees can cause local environmental nuisance, especially in urban areas.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Secretarial and Research Allowance

Mr. Pike asked the Lord Privy Seal what the secretarial and research allowance will be for right hon. and hon. Members for 1987-88.

Mr. Biffen: The resolution of the House of 20 July 1984 on the office, secretarial and research allowance provides for an increase with effect from 1 April each year by the same percentage by which the salary scale maximum plus inner London weighting, of a senior personal secretary in the Home Civil Service is increased.

Pay negotiations on the level of increase for this grade, effective from 1 April 1987, have not yet been concluded; therefore, I am unable to say what the allowance will be in 1987-88.

AIDS (Palace of Westminster Staff)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Lord Privy Seal (1) whether he has any plans to arrange for staff of the Palace of Westminster to be screened for antibodies to human immunodeficiency virus;

(2) whether any current or former staff of the Palace of Westminster have been found to have developed AIDS or antibodies to human immunodeficiency virus;

(3) what steps he has taken to ensure that staff of the Palace of Westminster are warned about those homosexual and other activities which are deemed to involve a high risk of AIDS infection.

Mr. Biffen: I shall reply shortly.

Car Park

Mr. Marlow asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will take action to require that cars left overnight in the House of Commons car park are parked other than in the top three levels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: It is desirable that cars, parked by or on the authority of Members, which arrive early or which remain for more than a short time, should wherever possible be parked on the third floor, thus leaving the higher levels for late arrivals or short-stay parking. A recommendation to this effect was made by the Services Committee in its fifth report of Session 1975-76; and I would welcome the co-operation of all right hon. and hon. Members in this respect.

Mr. Luce: There are no estimates of the number of people using the information services provided by the public library service in England. In 1985-86 there were 31 million recorded information inquiries, in 91 authorities. Many of these will have come from local industry and businesses.

Theatre Audiences

45. Mr. Eastham asked the Minister for the Arts what records are maintained by the Office of Arts and Libraries for theatre audiences.

72. Mr. Pendry asked the Ministr for the Arts what records are maintained by the Office of Arts and Libraries on theatre audiences.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council maintains records of attendances at subsidised theatres, and has just published figures for 1985-86, which show audiences of 5·6 million, an increase of 4 per cent. over 1984-85. The Society of West End Theatre publishes figures for its membership: over 10 million tickets have been sold in each of the last two years.

55. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Minister for the Arts whether he will set up a study of the audiences for theatre.

Mr. Luce: No. Adequate records are already maintained by the Arts Council for the country as a whole and by the Society for West End Theatre. The City university recently carried out an extensive survey of London theatre audiences.

Museums

53. Mr. Weetch asked the Minister for the Arts what is his latest estimate of the total number of young people visiting museums.

Mr. Luce: The ages of museum visitors are not usually recorded. However sample surveys of visitors to certain national museums and galleries suggest that between one fourth and one third of all visitors are under 20 years old.

54. Mr. Corbyn asked the Minister for the Arts what representations he has had about possible initiatives to increase the number of people visiting museums.

59. Ms. Clare Short asked the Minister for the Arts what representations he has had about possible initiatives to increase the number of people visiting museums.

67. Mr. Patchett asked the Minister for the Arts what is his latest estimate of the number of people visiting museums.

71. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Minister for the Arts what is his latest estimate of the number of people visiting museums in the south-west.

Mr. Luce: The information collected for the Museums Association database project suggests that some 5·3 million visits were made to museums and galleries in the south-west of England in 1985, the most recent year for which figures are available.

73. Mr. Blair asked the Minister for the Arts what is his estimate of the trend in the numbers of people visiting museums in the last five years for which statistics are available.

Mr. Luce: The number of visitors to the national museums and galleries sponsored by my Department in each of the last five years was as follows:

	Number
1982	16,273,367
1983	16,751,471
1984	16,983,778
1985	17,556,789
1986	16,821,151

Theatre Companies (Touring)

56. Mr. Maxton asked the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to promote the touring of theatre companies.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council has re-established its touring department under a new controller of touring. Recent initiatives include introducing new procedures for co-productions with regional theatres, independent producers and groups specially formed for touring, and special provision for the continuation of the RSC Newcastle season and for the small-scale tours undertaken by the RSC and the Royal Exchange company from Manchester.

Arts Events

58. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister for the Arts what his estimate is of the number of young people attending arts events in Wales.

Mr. Luce: This information is not recorded at present and would be costly to research. Audience surveys for the performing arts in Wales suggest that young people under 25 represent about one third of audiences, particularly for drama.

Regional Arts Associations

60. Mr. Flannery asked the Minister for the Arts whether he will meet the chairmen and directors of regional arts associations to discuss ways in which the audience for the arts might be widened.

78. Mr. Nellist asked the Minister for the Arts whether he will meet the chairmen and directors of regional arts associations to discuss ways in which the audiences for the arts might be widened.

Mr. Luce: I have met most of the chairmen and directors of regional arts associations in my visits to the regions, and we have frequently discussed how the arts can be made more accessible. The regional arts associations are playing a full part in my new arts marketing scheme.

Arts Centres (Audiences)

63. Mr. Lofthouse asked the Minister for the Arts what steps he has taken in the past year to widen audiences attending arts centres.

Mr. Luce: I have discussed the widening of the audience for the arts with many people since taking office, and have been impressed by the range of activity at the arts centres I have visited. The Arts Council include in its criteria for the allocation of grant the commitment of an arts body to the attraction of wider audiences. My new arts marketing scheme will, I hope, encourage many arts bodies to produce imaginative ideas for marketing themselves.

Special Arts Projects

64. Mr. Freud asked the Minister for the Arts whether he has any plans to alter the available contingency finance for special arts projects.

Mr. Luce: No. Arrangements exist for access to the Contingency Reserve in appropriate circumstances.

Audiences (Wales)

66. Mr. Ray Powell asked the Minister for the Arts what steps he has taken in the past year to widen audiences for the arts in Wales.

Mr. Luce: The Welsh Arts Council, in partnership with local authority and local arts organisations, supports three marketing consortia. Cardiff and Swansea art markets promote ideas for increasing audiences for the arts in their areas. In February 1987 a new initiative, Arts Marketing in Dyfed, was started in a rural area.

Acceptances in Lieu

68. Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Minister for the Arts whether he has any proposals to change the existing acceptance-in-lieu procedures.

Mr. Luce: A change to the existing procedures was announced in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1987/88" by my right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury on Tuesday 17 March. In future, those offering items for acceptance in lieu of tax will have the option of having interest charges waived on offers which are eventually accepted at the original agreed valuation, or of allowing interest charges to accrue and seeking a revaluation of the item before final acceptance. The choice may be made at any time before the memoranda of acceptance are exchanged.

88. Mr. Charles Morrison asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the recent operation of the acceptance-in-lieu provisions.

Mr. Luce: The present provisions are working well, as illustrated by the recent acceptance in principle of Constable's "Stratford Mill" or "The Young Waltonians". This offer is a demonstration that the arrangements for a call on the reserve announced by my predecessor in July 1985 are operating effectively and speedily.

I would also refer my hon. Friend to the recent announcement by my right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury that offerers now have the option either of having interest charges waived, with the item being accepted at the valuation originally agreed, or of seeking final acceptance, in which case accrued interest charges will be payable.

Music Audiences

78. Mr. Crowther asked the Minister for the Arts what steps he has taken in the past year to widen audiences for music.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council includes in its criteria for the allocation of grant the commitment of an arts body to the attraction of wider audiences. My new arts marketing scheme will, I hope, encourage many arts bodies to produce imaginative ideas for marketing themselves.

British Film Institute (Regional Theatres and Centres)

83. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Minister for the Arts what is his latest estimate for the size of the audience for attendances at British Film Institute regional theatres and centres.

Mr. Luce: Information as follows:

	Million
1985	1·294
1986	1·367

The figures exclude audiences at the national film theatre in London.

Audiences

85. Mr. Foulkes asked the Minister for the Arts what steps he has taken in the past year to widen audiences.

Mr. Luce: I hope that the introduction of my new arts marketing scheme will encourage many arts bodies to produce imaginative ideas which will in turn attract wider audiences.

Local Authority Libraries

89. Mr. Pawsey asked the Minister for the Arts what was the total expenditure, both current and capital, on local authority libraries in constant terms in (a) 1978-79 and (b) 1984-85.

Mr. Luce: Government figures show expenditure on public libraries in England at 1984-85 prices as follows:

	Current £ million	Capital £ million
1978-79	313	13
1984-85	326	28

The 1978-79 figures have been calculated using the Treasury GDP deflator.

Arts Council (Regional Co-operation)

90. Mr. Fallon asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the future of co-operation between the Arts Council and the regional arts associations.

Mr. Luce: Co-operation between the Arts Council and regional arts associations is already effective and has been substantially increased by the council's policies for regional development. To further these aims, I have decided to appoint three regional representatives to the council, each of whom will represent the regional arts associations in a broad geographical band. They will be able to answer for the regional arts associations and to put the regions case at the council. The first three appointees under these arrangements will be Mrs. Elizabeth Thomas, who is already serving, Mr. Robin Guthrie and Mr. Denys Hodson.

Ministerial Visits

91. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Minister for the Arts how many arts functions, arts bodies, museums and libraries he has visited in total since his appointment as Arts Minister.

Mr. Luce: Over 200.

Business Sponsorship Incentive Scheme

92. Viscount Cranborne asked the Minister for the Arts whether he intends to continue the business sponsorship inceitive scheme for 1988-89.

Mr. Luce: The business sponsorship incentive scheme has proved highly successful in raising over £11 million of new money for the arts and attracting over 400 first-time sponsors. As I told the House during the debate on the arts on 12 March, I have undertaken to continue the scheme in 1988-89.

British Theatre Museum

93. Mr. Richard Shepherd asked the Minister for the Arts when he expects the British theatre museum to open.

Mr. Luce: The trustees of the Victoria and Albert museum plan to open the theatre museum in Covent Garden to the public on 24 April 1987.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Mortgage Interest Payments

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing his estimate of the number of cases in which higher rate tax relief will be given on mortgage interest payments in the current and in the next financial year, together with (a) the gross amount of interest qualifying for relief, (b) the amount of higher rate relief payable and (c) the number of recipients of working age and their distribution by personal category and by range of gross income, together with the average amount of relief given at the standard and higher rates.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 23 March 1987, c. 40]: Estimates are in the tables. These are based on projections from the 1984-85 survey of personal incomes, and they are therefore subject to revision. I regret that it is not possible to provide reliable separate estimates for the small number of high income elderly taxpayers with mortgages.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mr. John Saunderson

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General whether it is his intention to prosecute under section 2 of the Official Secrets Act Mr. John Saunderson a retired civil servant for revealing official information concerning the personal tax affairs of the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the press.

The Attorney-General: No.

ENERGY

Margam Mine

84. Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has received a proposal from British Coal for the development of a new mine at Margam.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am pleased to announce the Government's approval of British Coal's proposal to construct a new mine at Margam in south Wales at a cost of £90 million. Discussions with British Coal about aspects of the financing of the project are continuing and in endorsing this proposal the Government will strongly support British Coal's case for an ECSC loan attracting an interest rate subsidy .

The Margam project will directly create 780 jobs and will indirectly generate a similar number of jobs. It will make an immediate and significant contribution to the alleviation of high unemployment in the locality. The coal represents a secure source of supply for many years to come for BSC coke ovens at Port Talbot and Llanwern in place of imported coals.

The Margam project will incorporate modern British mining technology capable of high levels of sustained performance. Even so, against the background of the current and prospective low prices for coking coal available on the market, British Coal has told me that the project will not proceed unless there is agreement on the six-day production as the viability of the mine depends on equipment being operated six days a week; I agree with this judgment. In reaching my decision I have taken into account the significant advances in productivity and the positive response of the men and management in south Wales. The increase in the area's productivity of 32 per cent. over the last year has shown what the combination of forward-looking attitudes and investment in new British mining technology can achieve at existing pits. I am confident that the area will continue to adapt to the changes that are essential if the industry is to prosper.

In 1981-82 and 1982-83 the amounts are final rate support grant payments. In 1983-84 to 1986-87 the amounts are grant entitlements based on the latest supplementary reports in each year.

The figures for 1979-80, 1980-81 are not comparable with those for the following years because the arrangements for paying rate support grant changed in 1981-82.

Notes:

(1) Rate support grant comprises block grant and domestic rate relief grant.
(2) Cash values converted to 1981-82 price levels using the GDP deflator.
(3) Figures may not add due to rounding.

Housing and Planning Act 1986

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received about the implementation of the Housing and Planning Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The majority of both the housing and planning provisions of this Act have already been implemented. During 1987 we have received a small number of representations on the implementation of the remaining provisions, notably sections 6 and 9 (sale of publicly rented dwellings), section 15 (grants for the improvement or repair of common parts of buildings), and paragraphs 7 and 8 of schedule 11 (award of costs at inquiries). We intend to bring the outstanding provisions into effect whenever this is practicable.

Caravan and Tent Sites

Mr. Hubbard-Miles asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when further consultation on legislation to unify licensing controls over caravan and tent sites is likely to take place.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department and the Welsh Office will today circulate a consultation paper to local authority associations and interested organisations in England and Wales. This proposes certain minor amendments to the proposals for introducing a single site licensing system for both tents and caravans, which were the subject of a private Member's Bill introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Bridgend (Mr. Hubbard-Miles) in the 1983-84 Session of Parliament. Consultation should also enable us to confirm that there remains a consensus in favour of reform of the existing legislation. I shall arrange for copies to be placed in the Library.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has taken a decision on London Docklands Development Corporation's development strategy for the royal docks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I have today approved a strategy for the royal docks proposed to me by the London Docklands Development Corporation which will turn 270 hectares of derelict land into a new employment, retailing, leisure and residential centre for London. The LDDC strategy, completed in consultation with me, will provide 7,000 housing units and some 48,000 jobs.

On 26 November last my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport authorised London Regional Transport to introduce a Bill for an eastern extension to the docklands light railway. The Government announced that they would support the Bill during its passage through Parliament provided LDDC came forward with an acceptable scheme for financing the project without calling on public funds. The Government are now satisfied that the £140 million extension could be financed from the sale of land owned by the LDDC. The Government will accordingly be lending their support to the Bill which will shortly be coming forward for Second Reading.

The 7·7 km extension of the docklands light railway, which will link Poplar to Beckton via the royal docks, will provide the public transport infrastructure essential to underpin the development strategy.

These decisions taken together pave the way for massive new development in the area which will exploit to the full opportunities offered by the royal docks.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Condoms)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the practice of other European Community Governments in respect of the distribution to prisoners of condoms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We are aware of reports that in some European prison systems condoms are being made available to prisoners, but we have no systematic or verified information about policy or practice abroad. I have nothing to add to the reply to the hon. Member's earlier question on this subject on 12 February, at column 324.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the financial implications of the reorganisation of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has made it clear that one of the primary objectives of the reorganisation of the force is to make the most effective use of resources. The major cost of planning and implementing the reorganisation was that of the staff involved, estimated at some £1¼ million, since June 1983. In addition, building alterations and associated work required to match existing accommodation to the new force structure have cost about £348,000 so far with a further £245,000 planned. This expenditure has been contained within the Metropolitan police cash limits.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the percentage of a police officer's time in London spent (a) in the police station and (b) on the street.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that information on how individual officers apportion their time as between street and station duties is not collected centrally. In 1986, however, 45·9 per cent. of the uniformed constable man days available for divisional use were allocated to street duty (which includes some time in stations) and 20·8 per cent. to station duty. The balance was accounted for by aid to other divisions or squads, training and other miscellaneous duties.

Mr. Di Carlo

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests were received from the Italian police for the arrest of Mr. Di Carlo; on what dates they were received; and what action was taken in each case.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the only specific request for the arrest of Di Carlo was received on 16 September 1981. Information was supplied on a number of occasions and was acted upon in each case; but Di Carlo could not be traced at any of the addresses supplied by the Italian authorities.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on what date the Metropolitan police found that the file on Mr. Di Carlo had been lost; and what action was taken to find it;

(2) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to whether the Metropolitan police had a file on Mr. Di Carlo when he was arrested by officers of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in June 1985.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the file on Mr. Di Carlo was opened in 1980 and has never been missing.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to whether the central drugs intelligence unit was aware of Mr. Di Carlo's involvement with drugs; and from what date it was in contact with the Italian police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that, although the central drugs intelligence unit had no direct contact with the Italian police, the unit was aware through the extradition squad and Interpol of Di Carlo's suspected involvement with drugs from June 1980.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to whether there will be an internal investigation by the Metropolitan police into the handling of the Di Carlo case; and whether he will place copies of the reports of all such investigations in the Library.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, who has been kept informed of all the circumstances of the case, does not consider any such investigation to be necessary.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to what action was taken to check the information and addressses of Mr. Di Carlo given by the Italian police to the Metropolitan police;

(2) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to whether Her Majesty's Customs and Excise informed the Metropolitan police that a lorry belonging to Fauci Continental Imports was carrying drugs; and what conclusions were reached.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not the practice to disclose operational information of this kind.

Cruelty to Animals

Sir Bernard Braine asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, in view of evidence of increasing cruelty to animals, he will now seek to strengthen the provisions of the Cruelty to Animals Act 1911 by giving the police power of entry where cruelty is suspected and the courts power to ban persons convicted of cruelty from keeping any type of animal, and by widening the protection given to wild animals held in captivity.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government are wholeheartedly committed to combating cruelty to animals. We are giving support to a Bill introduced by the hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) to double the maximum penalties under the Protection of Animals Act 1911. We have given careful thought to the proposal that the police should have a power of entry to investigate allegations of cruelty to animals, but believe that this would not be justified. We are looking carefully and sympathetically at the other proposals for changes to the legislation.

Police (Northumbria)

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to (a) increase grant to, or (b) increase the establishment of police forces in Northumbria in view of the high incidence of organised crime.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 18 December 1986 my right hon. Friend approved an increase of 35 constable posts for the Northumbria police with immediate effect, and 40 such posts with effect from 1 April 1987. We shall consider the force's needs further when it has recruited up to its new establishment.

Police grant is payable as a percentage of expenditure by each police authority. We have no plans at present to further increase the percentage which was increased to 51 per cent. last year in view of the demands on the police service. Block grant is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Passports

Mr. Oakes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will hold discussions with other EEC countries to obtain a common system of security to prevent the forgery of passports;

(2) what research has been conducted to ensure the security of British passports against forgery;

(3) what steps he is taking to ensure that British passports are protected from forgery by the highest standards of modern technology;

(4) how many instances of forged British passports have been discovered by his Department in each of the last five years;

(5) if he is satisfied with the security of the present British passport against forgery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: No passport can be immune from abuse, and a careful watch is therefore maintained by the passport department and the immigration service to check such abuse of British passports. In 1986, the only complete year for which figures are available, some 170 cases were recorded where passport details had been altered in various ways, and nine counterfeit documents were discovered. The security features to be incorporated in the common EC format machine readable passport due for issue from July 1988 will take account of experience gained so far.

While adopting common security features in all EC passports would not necessarily have operational advantages, there is close co-operation with our European partners. During its presidency of the Community last year, the United Kingdom prompted an initiative further to enhance this co-operation by ensuring the exchange of information and expertise so that, where abuse is detected, all states are able to respond to it.

Crime Statistics

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people with disabilities have been the victims of crime against (a) the person and (b) property in the London area during 1987.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not available.

Mr. Trevor Monerville

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date the death occurred of Mr. Trevor Monerville, in respect of whose treatment by the police at Stoke Newington police station a complaint has been made by his father.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am glad to say that Mr. Monerville is alive.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Greater London

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what arrangements exist within his Department, within the central headquarters or in any regional or sub-regional organisation, for dealing with his responsibilities regarding public services or any other function in respect of the Greater London area; and how many full-time equivalent staff are involved in such work.

Mr. Butcher: My Department's functions concern trade and industry located in Greater London, as in other parts of the country; but no unit of my Department, and none of my staff, is exclusively concerned with Greater London.

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry with which Departments and non-departmental bodies his Department, and its related non-departmental public bodies has consulted during 1986-87 in respect of services provided within Greater London; approximately how often such consultations have taken place; and what issues were discussed.

Mr. Butcher: No record is kept of this information.

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether there are any proposals to change the arrangements for discharging his Department's responsibilities regarding public services or any other function in respect of the Greater London area during the forthcoming year.

Mr. Butcher: No.

Imports

Mr. Lamble asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give details of imports of category 13 products, knitted knickers, pants and briefs, from China in 1986 and comparable figures for 1985; what steps he proposes to take to restrain such imports in future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Imports of category 13 products, knitted knickers, pants and briefs, from China amounted to 8,912,000 pieces, net of imports for inward processing, in 1986, against a comparable figure of 2,282,000 in 1985.

My Department is currently discussing the significance of these figures within the industry in the light of import trends generally and the impact on United Kingdom production.

Mr. Lambie asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give details of imports of category 5 products, sweaters, from Mauritius during 1986 and comparable figures for 1985; what steps he proposes to take to restrain such imports in future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Imports of category 5 products, sweaters, from Mauritius in 1986 reached a total of 3,211,000 pieces. In 1985, category 5 imports were 2,412,000 pieces. My Department is currently examining the scope for action in conjunction with the Community.

Employee Inventors

Mr. Norris asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has reached a decision on whether any changes are needed to the legal rights of employee inventors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: The 1983 Green Paper "Intellectual Property Rights and Innovation" (Cmnd. 9117) concluded that the rights of individual employee inventors should be strengthened along the lines of German law by giving them rights to take title in their inventions which are not being exploited by their employer. Following this recommendation, the Government commissioned an independent study into the German system and whether that system, in whole or in part; would be of economic benefit in the different legal and industrial environment of the United Kingdom. The White Paper "Intellectual Property and Innovation" (Cmnd. 9712) referred to the study and announced that its results were being examined.

Having considered the results of the study, and taking into account representations received from industry, patent professionals and other interested parties, the Government have concluded that no changes in the law should be made. There is little evidence that a system on German lines would bring any tangible economic benefits; yet the administrative burdens which would be imposed on industry and Government by the introduction of such a system in the United Kingdom would be substantial.

The Government believe that a more promising approach to the problem of unexploited in-house inventions is to give employers better incentives to identify marketable innovation. One example is the collaborative "spin-out" method, whereby private venture capital is provided for projects in which the parent company and employees each have part interests. Further studies of this and other aids to innovation are therefore to be made.

South Africa

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will report on how British companies have complied with the European Community's code of conduct for companies with interests in South Africa during the 12 months period to 30 June 1986.

Mr. Alan Clark: By 13 March 1987, 160 companies had submitted reports to the Department under the code of conduct. Copies of the reports, and of the Department's analysis and summary have, as in previous years, been placed in the Library of each House. These documents may also be inspected at the Department's library, at the British embassy in Pretoria, at the British consulate-general in Johannesburg, and at the British consulates in Cape Town and Durban.

The analysis and summary is the first since the introduction of the revised code of conduct was adopted by EC Foreign Ministers in November 1985. Reports were received from the overwhelming majority of British companies with interests in South Africa. Of those companies whose interests are known or believed technically to warrant a full report under the code, only two declined to submit returns. One of these has already sold its interests and the other intends to do so. In some respects the period was a transitional one, in that not all reports received were in the revised format and the restructuring of the code impairs comparison in many sections with previous years' reports.

The reporting period was again characterised by continued economic recession in which wage rates throughout the South African economy generally failed to keep pace with consumer price inflation. Against this background, the performance of British subsidiaries in reducing substantially the number of their black employees paid below the supplemented living level is notable. Over 96 per cent. are now paid above that level. There were indications of a growing commitment to education and community projects too.

The Government are grateful to companies for their continued efforts in reporting and urges them to comply fully with the code.

Enterprise Education

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, of the funds made available to the Royal Society of Arts, during Industry Year 1986, to publicise the importance of Enterprise Education (a) how much and (b) what proportion of the total amount was spent on (i) publicity materials in schools in the United Kingdom (ii) publicity materials in schools in Wales and (iii) publicity materials in the Welsh language.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Company Directors

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many company directors have been prosecuted and disqualified as a result of the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986.

Mr. Howard: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Oils and Fats

Mrs. McCurley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the scope and nature of the proposed European Economic Community tax on oils and fats.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Potatoes

Sir Paul Hawkins asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has determined the market prices for potatoes to apply in Great Britain for the 1987-88 crop year beginning on 1 July.

Mr. Gummer: Following consultations with the farmers unions I have decided to authorise the Potato Marketing Board to enter into pre-season contracts with producers to purchase up to 300,000 tonnes of potatoes over the months November 1987 to May 1988 at a scale of prices not to exceed an average of £53 per tonne. I have also agreed that the board may intervene directly on the market throughout the season where this will ensure support more cheaply than purchases under contract, provided that the total intervention does not exceed 500,000 tonnes. The target area for potato plantings in Great Britain, another important factor in market stability, was fixed last July at 156,500 hectares.

I have approved increases in the Potato Marketing Board's scale of direct intervention trigger prices for the period November to June inclusive to bring them into a more realistic relationship with the board's contract prices. I believe that placing increased emphasis on direct intervention will balance the effect of higher trigger prices and will thus avoid adding to the potential cost of market support. Overall, I believe that these arrangements will provide growers with a reasonable level of fall-back support in the event of surplus production arising in 1987-88. I shall be looking to producers themselves to ensure that our industry remains competitive by matching plantings as closely as possible to the target area set by the Government.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Thurnham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about milk quotas in 1987-88.

Mr. Jopling: As the House will already be aware, the Community agreed last year to the permanent reduction of milk quotas by 2 per cent. with effect from 1 April 1987. A Community outgoers scheme has been operating in the United Kingdom to obtain as much as possible of this quantity by voluntary means, subject to a 2 per cent. maximum in any purchaser area. This measure has achieved 10·78 per cent. of the target quantity in the United Kingdom as a whole.

For wholesale quotas, the balance of the 2 per cent. reduction required will be obtained by applying cuts in each purchaser area where the 2 per cent. reduction was not achieved through the outgoers scheme, resulting in a reduction in each producer's quota as at 1 April. The reduction factors to be applied are as follows:

	per cent.
England and Wales	1·89
Northern Ireland	1·30
Scottish MMB	1·42
Shetland	2·00
Other Scottish purchaser areas	Nil

For direct sales quota, the reduction factors will be as follows:

	per cent.
England and Wales	1·88
Northern Ireland	2·00
Scottish MMB	0·14
Shetland	2·00
Other Scottish areas	Nil

As a result of new arrangements agreed by the Agriculture Council last February, compensation for these compulsory reductions will be paid from Community funds, at the same rate as is payable under the outgoers scheme, that is 27·49p per litre spread over seven years.

The European Commission has made it clear to us that it disputes the legality of the present allocation of milk quotas to Northern Ireland and would initiate legal action against us if we did not change it. To meet this point a transfer of 30,000 tonnes of wholesale milk quota will be made from Great Britain to Northern Ireland in addition to the 20,600 tonnes transferred last autumn. This will bring the treatment of Northern Ireland producers with special needs more closely into line with that of producers elsewhere in the United Kingdom. We shall aim to obtain this quantity by voluntary means. I shall shortly be announcing details of a national outgoers scheme, but in order to ensure that the required quota is made available it will be necessary, pending the outcome of the scheme, to make a provisional reduction in quotas of about 0·3 per cent. from 1 April. I hope that the response to the national outgoers measure will enable this provisional reduction to be withdrawn. The rate of compensation under the national outgoers measure will be 27·49p-litre spread over seven years. To the extent that the provisional quota reduction needs to be made permanent, producers will be compensated on the same basis. To provide for this expenditure the cash limits on relevant Votes (Class IV, Vote 4 and Class XVI, Vote 2) will be increased and Supplementary Estimates will be presented to Parliament. The increases in expenditure will be contained within planned provision for programmes and will not involve a call on the Reserve.

Also arising from agreement within the Community, a 4 per cent. suspension will be imposed on wholesale quotas for 1987-88 and one of 5½ per cent. for 1988-89. For the 4 per cent. suspension in 1987-88 producers will receive compensation at a rate of 6·5p-litre, which represents almost double the average profit per litre for milk production.

A further permanent reduction of 1 per cent. of all quotas will need to be implemented with effect from 1 April 1988. As with the 2 per cent. cut, the industry will be offered the opportunity to surrender the necessary quota voluntarily through an outgoers scheme and compensation will be paid over seven years at 6 ecu-100 kg (27.49p-litre at current conversion rates). I shall be announcing further details as soon as possible, following consultations with industry organisations.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Tertiary Education

Mr. Merlyn Rees asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the local authorities where tertiary education has been approved by his Department.

Mr. Dunn: The following is the list of local education authorities whose proposals under sections 12 to 15 of the Education Act 1980 involving the establishment of tertiary colleges for all or part of the authority's area have been approved by my right hon. Friend or his predecessors.

*Bury (opening September 1987)

*In authorities marked with an asterisk, and following the opening of tertiary colleges in these authorities, all county 16 to 19 provision will be in the form of tertiary colleges. The other listed LEAs offer county provision also in sixth forms and/or sixth form colleges. All the LEAs listed offer voluntary sector provision in school sixth forms and/or sixth form colleges.

Science and Engineering Research Council

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much has been disbursed by the Science and Engineering Research Council teaching in companies scheme in each year since the scheme was introduced; how much has been disbursed to (a) individuals and (b) companies in Yorkshire and Humberside in each year since this scheme was introduced; how much is to be disbursed to individuals and companies in Yorkshire and Humberside under the council's latest allocation; what representations about this allocation he has received; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The Science and Engineering Research Council has been asked for this information. I shall reply as soon as possible.

GCSE

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to increase the level of funding for general certificate of secondary education subjects in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Government are supporting the successful launch of the general certificate of secondary education with a massive injection of resources in the new financial year, building on the substantial sums already committed. In 1987-88 we are providing for spending in excess of £115 million to prepare teachers and to resource schools for the GCSE.

For the teachers, we have identified GCSE in-service training as a national priority and have provided for £15 million expenditure on this. We have given a further grant to the GCSE examining groups to fund the preparation of in-service training material. Moreover, the Government have planned for a continued improvement in the pupil-teacher ratio, partly in recognition of the demands of GCSE.

For the schools, the Government are providing for £100 million expenditure on GCSE. In particular, this is to pay for the books, equipment and materials required for GCSE courses, and to pay for additional technical and clerical staff who can provide valuable help and support for teachers. Included within this sum is the specific support of £10 million expenditure, through education support grant, for GCSE books and equipment.

We will continue to monitor closely the introduction of GCSE. We have already promised to continue special funding in later years. No other examination has been so well endowed on its introduction.

Soviet Union (British Students)

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to review his decision to reclassify the maintenance grant for British students studying in the Soviet Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: Subject to Parliament's approval of the necessary regulations, the Soviet Union will be reclassified as a high-cost country for the purposes of mandatory awards with effect from September 1987.

Mr. H. V. J. Whitby

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science for how long Mr. H. V. J. Whitby, a teacher at Hatch End high school, Harrow, has been suspended from teaching at the school; what are the reasons given by the local education authority; if written complaints made either by a pupil or members of the public will be made available to Mr. Whitby; and if he will initiate a full inquiry into the matter.

Mrs. Rumbold: I understand from Harrow LEA that Mr. Whitby was placed on leave of absence on 15 July 1983, and since September 1984 has been on sick leave. The Department is in correspondence with Harrow about this case and about how the matter may be resolved.

Higher Education Colleges

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list alphabetically all the colleges in England providing higher education work with 50 per cent. or more of students on advanced courses, indication in which local education authority and British and European parliamentary constituencies they fall.

Mr. Walden: I shall reply as soon as possible.

WALES

Archaeological Remains

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to amend the powers local authorities in Wales have to prevent the destruction of archaeological remains of historic value.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There are no plans to alter such powers.

University of Wales

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will clarify what involvement his Department has in discussions relating to the future of the University of Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The University of Wales is an autonomous institution, operating under royal charter. The university and its constituent colleges receive the bulk of their funding from the Department of Education and Science acting on advice from the University Grants Committee. Within the limits set by the resources available to it the university enjoys academic freedom and is responsible for determining its own future without interference from any Department of State. While my right hon. Friend and I keep in close touch with representatives of the university, its future is a matter for the university itself to consider in conjunction with the UGC.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what financial assistance his Department gives towards the cost of teaching through the medium of the Welsh language at the University of Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Department has no responsibility for the funding of undergraduate teaching through the medium of Welsh at the University of Wales. Resources for this purpose are provided through the University Grants Committee's recurrent grant allocations.

The Department grant-aids the extra mural departments of the University of Wales' constituent colleges, whose programmes of liberal adult studies include some courses provided through the medium of Welsh. It is not possible to say what proportion of the £680,000 allocated to the EMD for the 1986-87 academic year will be used to fund Welsh medium courses.

Additionally, under section 21 of the Education Act 1980, £69,250 has been made available in 1986-87 mainly for activities related to the teaching of Welsh to adults.

Roads

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the motorway and trunk road construction contracts with a works cost of £1 million or more which his Department intends to award in 1987-88, showing in each case the total value of the contract and the expenditure likely to be incurred in that year.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Subject to the satisfactory completion of statutory procedures, the completion of engineering design and the availability of resources we hope to let contracts for the following major schemes in 1987-88.

A55	Penmaenmawr bypass
A483	Newbridge bypass and Whitehurst Link
A55	Northop bypass
A470	Llanidloes bypass
A55	Llanfairfechan bypass
A48	Nant-y-Caws—Coed Hirion bypass.

It is not possible to give the cost of the contracts or the expenditure to be incurred in 1987-88, since this will depend on the value of the accepted tenders and the contractors' programmes of work.

Welsh Arts Council

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the membership of the Welsh Arts Council for each year since 1979.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is contained in the relevant annual reports of the Arts Council of Great Britain, copies of which are in the Libraries of the House.

MSC (Publications)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales which of the publications which have been circulated to schools in Wales by the Manpower Services Commission have been circulated (a) in a bilingual Welsh-English form, (b) with separate Welsh and English versions, (c) in Welsh only and (d) in English only.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Manpower Services Commission does not as a matter of course circulate publications to schools. The following, which relate to the needs of young people in Wales, are available on request in both English and Welsh language editions.

TFS L1	Training for Skills
TFS L1(W)	Hyfforddiant Sgiliau
TFS L2	What parents should know

One other publication, "Action Special 1986", which supported the joint MSC-BBC1 campaign in 1986, is available in English only.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the proposed relationship between the new Welsh language education development committee and the Manpower Services Commission in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It is for the new committee to develop such relationships with other bodies as will help it to discharge its role.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list alphabetically all the colleges in Wales providing higher education work with 50 per cent. or more of students on advanced courses, indicating under which local education authority and British and European parliamentary constituency they fall.

Regional Aid

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide the latest available figure for regional development grant expenditure in Wales for the year 1986-87, and an estimate of what he expects the final figure to be.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The latest available figure for regional development grant expenditure in Wales for 1986-87 is £86·89 million. The final figure is expected to be in the region of £89 million.

Trident Missile

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence what nuclear tests (i) have been carried out and (ii) are proposed, in respect of Trident; whether Her Majesty's Government intend to rely on United States tests or to carry out their own; and when it is anticipated that such tests will be completed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Joint United Kingdom/United States nuclear weapons tests are carried out at the Nevada test site as part of the continuing development of our nuclear warheads and in order to maintain the effectiveness of the UK's nuclear capability. All tests are announced at the time but it would not be in the national interest to identify the specific purpose of each test.

Empty Properties

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those local authorities in whose areas his Department has empty properties; how many empty properties have been offered to local authorities or housing associations on a short-term basis; and how many have been taken up in each authority.

Mr. Freeman: Records are not maintained of the local authorities in whose areas the MOD has empty properties or of the number of properties which have been offered to local authorities or housing associations on a short-term basis. The following properties are currently leased to local authorities and housing associations:

Mr. Sharif

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence if Mr. Sharif of London E.17, who committed suicide in Bristol on 28 October 1986, had been engaged in work of a classified nature for his Department; during what period Mr. Shariff worked for defence contractors on work financed by public funds; and if his work is subject to the current investigations by Ministry of Defence police at Marconi in Portsmouth.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Mr. Sharif was employed by Marconi Defence Systems plc from 24 June 1985 until his death on 28 October 1986. His work did not entail access to information classified above restricted. He was employed at Stanmore, not Portsmouth.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his policy on the future role of dual-capable United States Air Force F111 aircraft based in Britain in the light of the proposal by the Commander-in-Chief of the United States Strategic Air Command that these aircraft should be converted to carry air-launched cruise missiles in the event of all intermediate range nuclear force missiles being removed from Europe;

(2) what consideration is being given by his Department to the role of nuclear-armed air-launched cruise or stand-off missiles in the event of the complete removal of intermediate range nuclear force missiles from Europe.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

Eastern Europe

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on changes in the total number of Soviet troops deployed in eastern Europe since 1979.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

United States Forces

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the locations of sites earmarked for storage of pre-positioned medical stocks for United States forces;

(2) if he will list the Royal Air Force bases currently being acquired by the United States Air Force for use as contingency hospitals.

Mr. Freeman: United States forces pre-positioned medical supplies and contingency hospitals exist at the following locations:

RAF Little Rissington, RAF Nocton Hall, RAF Chessington, RAF Bicester, RAF Feltwell, RAF Upwood

In addition permission has been given for the establishment of pre-positioned supplies and contingency hospitals at the following locations:

RAF Locking, RAF Condor (Arbroath), Winston Barracks (Lanark), Ritchie Barracks (Kirknewton)

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Oxfam

Mr. William Shelton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has received any representations regarding the Oxfam meeting on 28 February in Friary Hall, Crawley, where it agreed to distribute badges and leaflets throughout the United Kingdom in support of the South West Africa People's Organisation.

Mrs. Chalker: My hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development has received representations from three hon. Members about the Oxfam meeting on 28 February.

Mr. William Shelton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have held any discussions with the charity Oxfam concerning its activities in Namibia/South West Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: We have exchanged views on the situation in Namibia with Oxfam from time to time. We do not, however, provide funding for Oxfam's activities in Namibia and have not therefore had occasion to discuss those activities in detail with Oxfam.

Arms Control

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what Her Majesty's Government's policy is on full and free on-site inspection of military sites in Britain in order to verify an intermediate range nuclear force zero option.

Mr. Renton: A rigorous verification regime, including on-site inspection, will be an essential part of any INF agreement. The precise details have yet to be agreed. We are prepared to play our part as necessary.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the current round of talks in Geneva on intermediate range nuclear force includes any consideration of dual-capable aircraft.

Mr. Renton: The current INF negotiations at Geneva concern land-based missiles. Dual-capable aircraft are not included.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had, during his recent visit to Hungary, on the potential for reciprocal measures of arms control and disarmanent by the United Kingdom and Hungary.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend had useful discussions with members of the Hungarian Government on a wide range of arms control and disarmament issues. The detailed content of those talks is confidential between our two Governments.

Soviet Troop Withdrawals

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on unilateral Soviet troop withdrawals from eastern Europe.

Mr. Renton: There has been speculation in the British press about the possibility of Soviet troop withdrawals from eastern Europe. The Soviet Union has made no statement on any such withdrawal.

Norwegian Foreign Minister

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to meet the newly appointed Norwegian Foreign Minister in advance of the forthcoming North Atlantic Council meeting.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to meet Mr. Stoltenberg before the North Atlantic Council meeting.

THE ARTS

Welsh Arts Council

Mr. Wigley asked the Minister for the Arts if he will list the grants allocated to the Welsh Arts Council in each year since 1979, at both current and 1987 prices.

Mr. Luce: The information requested is as follows:

EMPLOYMENT

Heart of England Tourist Board

12. Mr. Pawsey asked the Paymaster General what information he has on the amount of income that has been generated by tourism in the Heart of England tourist board area in each year since 1978.

Mr. Trippier: Tourist spending in the Heart of England tourist board area increased from £205 million in 1978 to £545 million in 1985. This is a rise in real terms of 40 per cent.

A table giving full information has been placed in the Library.

39. Mr. Bevan asked the Paymaster General whether he will list information available to him on the principal tourist attractions and facilities constructed or substantially renovated in the Heart of England tourist board area in each year since 1978.

Mr. David Trippier: Information about the full range of private and public sector investment which has been carried out in tourist attractions and facilities in the region since 1978 is not available. However since 1982-83, when the Heart of England tourist board area became fully eligible for assistance under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969, the English Tourist Board has offered assistance totalling £1·2 million for 11 projects in the region where the total capital cost of the work exceeded £500,000.

The projects are as follows:

Ironbridge Gorge Museum/Blists Hill
National Motorcycle Museum, Solihull
Everyman Theatre, Cheltenham
Ettingtom Park Hotel, Stratford Upon Avon
Park House Hotel, Shifnal
Arden Restaurant and Motel, Solihull
Tara Hotel, Upton St. Leonards
Birmingham Botanic Gardens
Patshull Park Hotel, Pattingham
Tewdesbury Hall Hotel, Twyning
Aylesbury House, Hockley Heath

Racial and Sexual Discrimination

13. Mrs. Shields asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on measures to prevent racial or sexual discrimination in Manpower Services Commission sponsored training schemes.

Mr. Lee: All training programmes sponsored by the MSC are equal opportunity programmes, open to all those who are eligible. Regardless of race, sex, religion or disability. All MSC contracts with training providers draw attention to the legislation covering race and sex discrimination and require them to comply with it. The MSC monitors its equal opportunities policy closely and underpins it with a wide range of administrative provisions.

Labour Mobility

14. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement concerning the outcome of Government schemes to help the unemployed move in order to find jobs.

Mr. Lee: During the year ended 31 March 1986 3,300 unemployed people were helped by the employment transfer scheme. We discontinued this scheme in April 1986 as it was not a cost effective way of helping people into jobs. The travel to interview scheme which helps unemployed people with the costs of attending job interviews held beyond normal daily travelling distance of their home, is now helping over 2,000 people each month compared with 330 who were helped by its predecessor the job search scheme.

Disabled People

15. Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General how many firms with over 20 workers are failing to fulfil their statutory quota of employing 3 per cent. of their labour force from registered disabled people; and how many of these firms have been allocated permits exempting them from the quota.

Mr. Lee: On 1 June 1986, the latest date for which information is available, 24,643 employers with twenty or more workers were not employing their full quota of registered disabled people. 18,840 of these had, during the previous twelve months, been granted permits authorising the engagement of other than registered disabled people.

London (Tourism)

16. Mr. Butterfill asked the Paymaster General what action he proposes to take to encourage the dispersal of tourism from London in the light of the report "Tourism in London: Resident Opinion Survey by the London Tourist Board and Convention Bureau", a copy of which has been forwarded to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I share the view of the large majority of residents questioned who felt that tourists should be encouraged to spend time in other parts of Britain as well as London. It is a priority of the British Tourist Authority and English tourist board to encourage the wider dispersal of visitors throughout the country.

Community Programme

17. Mr. Alton asked the Paymaster General if he will review the procedures which prevent applicants who have been unemployed for less than six months from joining the community programme.

Mr. Lee: No. The community programme is specially designed for long term unemployed people who have greater difficulty than those unemployed for a shorter period in getting into work.

49. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the future development of the community programme.

Mr. Lee: In 1987-88 the community programme will provide jobs for some 300,000 people, the same level as in 1986-87. The emphasis of the programme will be on improving the quality of projects and provision will be focused more closely on priorities such as inner cities, enterprise, and national initiatives live crime prevention, energy efficiency and tourism.

Job Creation

18. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General how many full-time jobs at average earnings have been created by Her Majesty's Government's measures in the last four years.

Mr. Lee: It is not possible to estimate the number of full-time jobs at average pay created as a result of Government measures.

Yeovil

19. Mr. Ashdown asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the trends in unemployment in the Yeovil travel-to-work area; and if he will give the latest figures.

Mr. Lee: Unemployment in the Yeovil travel-to-work area is estimated to have fallen by about 200, or 5 per cent., over the last year.

On 12 February 1987 the number of unemployed claimants in the Yeovil travel-to-work area was 3,660, representing 9·1 per cent. of employees in employment plus the unemployed.

Gangmasters (Employees)

20. Mr. Freud asked the Paymaster General what information he has about the number of persons in (a) the Wisbech and (b) the March area who are employed by gangmasters.

Mr. Lee: I have no such information but there is little doubt that the use of gang labour has increased in recent years.

Labour Statistics

21. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the current level of unemployment.

Mr. Lee: On 12 February, the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom was 3,225,809.

24. Mr. Hardy asked the Paymaster General what proportion of the population between the ages of 18 and 60 years are now in full-time employment.

Mr. Lee: The information is not readily available in the exact form requested.

Preliminary Labour Force Survey results for the spring of 1986 estimate that 54·0 per cent. of all persons aged 16 and under 60 were in full-time employment (including Government Schemes) in Great Britain.

30. Mr. Flannery asked the Paymaster General what is the latest figure for unemployment; and if he will make a statement.

46. Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the latest unemployment figures.

Mr. Lee: On 12 February 1987, the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom was 3,225,809.

37. Mr. Chapman asked the Paymaster General what assessment he has made of the likely numbers of people seeking employment in the United Kingdom in the next five years; and if he will make a statement about relevant demographic trends.

Mr. Lee: Taking account of the latest population projections and of information on activity rates from the 1986 "Labour Force Survey", my Department projects that the civilian labour force in Great Britain will rise by about 500,000 between June 1986 and June 1991. The projected rate of growth is considerably faster at the beginning of this period than at the end. More detailed figures and explanations will be published in an article which is scheduled for the May issue of Employment Gazette.

The demographic trends of most relevance to the size of the labour force are those in the numbers of entries to and exits from the population of working age. Reflecting the pattern of the baby boom 16 years earlier, the number of entrants has reduced somewhat from its peak in 1981 and further substantial reductions are projected. The number of exits, mostly people reaching retirement age, is projected to be relatively constant. As a result the rate of increase in the population of working age is projected to decline each year, from 176,000 in 1986-87 to zero in 1990-91.

45. Mr. Watts asked the Paymaster General if he will make a further statement on the trends of unemployment and employment.

Mr. Lee: Unemployment has fallen continuously for the past seven months and is now 150,000 below the level of last July. Employment has risen every quarter since spring 1983. There were 1,040,000 more people in work in September 1986 than there were in March 1983.

50. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Paymaster General what percentage of men aged 55 to 65 years were unemployed at the last available date; and what were the comparable figures in 1979 and 1983.

Mr. Lee: On 8 January 1987, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by age is available, the rates of unemployment, expressed as a percentage of the working population for males in the 55 to 59 and 60 and over age groups in the United Kingdom were 17·6 per cent. and 7·5 per cent. respectively. The corresponding unemployment rates for January 1983 were 15·0 per cent. and 22·1 per cent. This comparison is affected by changes in coverage of the data, in particular the effect of the 1983 Budget measures for men over 60. Unemployment rates by age, expressed a percentage of the working population are available only from January 1983.

The published figures for January 1979 related to unemployed registrants expressed as a percentage of employees in employment plus the unemployed and these were 5·5 per cent. and 12·0 per cent. in the respective age groups.

52. Mr. Dobson asked the Paymaster General what percentage of the total unemployed are aged 25 years or less; and what initiatives the Government are pursuing in London in particular in order to provide full-time employment at average rates of pay for those affected.

Mr. Lee: On 8 January 1987, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by age is available, 34·4 per cent. of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom were aged under 25 years.

All of the employment, training and enterprise measures run by my Department and the Manpower Services Commission are part of a wider strategy for encouraging enterprise and employment in London and elsewhere.

58. Mr. Deakins asked the Paymaster General how many people have been unemployed for more than 12 months at the latest available date; and what percentage of the total unemployed this represents.

Mr. Lee: On 8 January 1987, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by duration is available, the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom who had been unemployed for over 12 months was 1,334,430 which represents 40·5 per cent. of the total.

60. Mr. O'Brien asked the Paymaster General if he will give the numbers of people out of work in the Wakefield travel-to-work area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: On 12 February 1987, the number of unemployed claimants in the Wakefield and Dewsbury travel-to-work area was 17,132.

Basildon

22. Mr. Amess asked the Paymaster General if he will list the figures for the latest numbers of unemployed in Basildon.

Mr. Lee: On 12 February 1987, there were 8,406 unemployed claimants in the Basildon local authority district.

"Trade Unions and their Members"

23. Mr. Madel asked the Paymaster General how many representations he has received concerning his Green Paper "Trade Unions and their Members"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: So far I have received 22 representations.

Entrepreneurs (Business Space)

25. Mr. Lawler asked the Paymaster General what representations he has received concerning the availability of affordable small unit business space for professional entrepreneurs.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to my earlier reply of 25 March at column 169.

Industrial Training Board (Levies)

26. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Paymaster General what percentage of industrial training board levies have to be collected by issuing court proceedings.

Mr. Trippier: Precise information is not readily available, but I am advised that the total amount of levy income collected by industrial training boards as a result of beginning court proceedings is small.

Restart

27. Miss Boothroyd asked the Paymaster General how many people have been called for interview under restart to date; and what percentage have gone on to receive full-time employment as a result.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: By 12 February 1987, 1,291,038 people had been called for interview of whom 1,003,644, had been interviewed. We have no means of knowing precisely what proportion have gone on to full time employment as a result.

36. Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Paymaster General how many people have been submitted for a job or training placement under restart; and what percentage were actually offered a job or placement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: By 12 February 1,003,644 people had been interviewed under the restart programme. We have no means of knowing precisely how many have since found jobs or other opportunities, such as training, which might lead to employment. However, 74 per cent. of participants agreed to pursue the offer made to them at their restart interview.

Budget

28. Mr. Bruce asked the Paymaster General what effect he expects the Budget to have on average levels of unemployment, and disparities between the nations and regions of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Budget will help to sustain the pace of economic growth enterprise and employment creation throughout the United Kingdom.

North-West (Job Creation)

29. Mr. Silvester asked the Paymaster General how many new jobs have been created in the north-west region since 1983.

Mr. Lee: There are no figures for job gains and job losses.

Between June 1983 and June 1986 there was a net increase of 4,000 in the civilian employed labour force (which is the sum of employees in employment plus the self-employed) in the north-west region. This is the result of a decrease of employees in employment of 39,000 and an increase in the number of self-employed of 43,000.

Job Training Scheme

31. Mr. Baldry asked the Paymaster General what progress is being made in establishing the job training scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The new job training scheme is already operating in the pilot areas. We are well advanced with our plans to make the scheme available in all areas of the country from early April. The pilots have shown that the training offered is clearly attractive to long term unemployed people and there has been no shortage of training organisations coming forward to operate the scheme.

Job Clubs Programme

32. Mr. Dykes asked the Paymaster General if he has been able to assess the effects on local employment figures from the job clubs programme since the scheme was launched last year.

Mr. Lee: Job clubs have clearly been successful in helping a large number of long term unemployed people to find work.

In the period between November 1984 when the first Job club was opened, and 6 March 1987 (the latest date for which statistics are available) 20,606 people have been helped. Of these 12,312 (60 per cent.) have gone into jobs and a further 2,701 (13 per cent.) found temporary work through the community programme or entered a training programme or started a business under the enterprise allowance scheme.

Northern Region (Job Creation)

33. Mr. Boyes asked the Paymaster General what is the success rate of small firms in the creation of jobs after one, two and five years, respectively, in the northern region.

Mr. Trippier: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Tourist Development Grant Scheme

34. Mr. Ottaway asked the Paymaster General whether he will estimate how many direct jobs will be created via projects aided under the tourist development grant scheme in the current financial year.

Mr. Trippier: In the current financial year assistance under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969 has been offered by the English Tourist Board to 630 projects. The board estimates that over 2,800 jobs will be created directly in these projects as a result.

YTS

35. Mr. Ashton asked the Paymaster General how many people are presently engaged in the YTS.

Mr. Trippier: On 28 February 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, there were around 328,000 people in training on YTS in Great Britain.

Black Economy

38. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Paymaster General what is his latest estimate of the number of people working in the black economy.

Mr. Trippier: Because of the nature of the black economy it is impossible to estimate the number of people working in it.

Tourism

40. Mr. Cockeram asked the Paymaster General what assessment he has made of the implications for the United Kingdom travel industry of participation in computerised travel and hotel reservations systems.

Mr. Trippier: The effective use of new technology can play an important part in ensuring that the United Kingdom travel industry remains competitive. A number of computerised reservation systems are already in operation in the United Kingdom. It is important for the industry to co-ordinate a strategy for the development and integration of computerised reservations systems and I am pleased to see that an industry action group, with the provisional title of Access UK, has recently been established for this purpose. The British tourist authority will be providing initial secretarial support and assistance to the group.

41. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Paymaster General if he will estimate the number of en-suite bathrooms added to hotel and guest house bedrooms in England in each year since 1978.

Mr. Trippier: It would be possible to provide compresensive information only at disproportionate cost. But from April 1983 to date a total of 1,159 projects in the serviced accommodation sector have been offered assistance totalling over £24 million by the English Tourist Board under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969. A high proportion of these projects has involved the provision of en-suite bathrooms.

43. Mr. Gregory asked the Paymaster General what information he has on the number of tourists visiting each regional tourist board in each year since 1978, both as a whole and expressed as a percentage of the total national figure.

48. Mr. Cash asked the Paymaster General what information he has on the amount of money spent in each tourist board area by holiday makers and business visitors.

51. Sir Peter Blaker asked the Paymaster General what information he has on the amount of income that has been generated by tourism in the north-west tourist board area in each year since 1978.

53. Mr. Yeo asked the Paymaster General what information he has on the amount of income that has been generated by tourism in the East Anglia tourist board area in each year since 1978.

54. Mr. Coombs asked the Paymaster General what information he has on the amount of income that has been generated by tourism in the West Country tourist board area in each year since 1978.

55. Mr. Tim Smith asked the Paymaster General what information he has on the amount of income that has been generated by tourism in the Thames and Chiltern tourist board area in each year since 1978.

Mr. Trippier: A table giving this information has been placed in the Library.

56. Mr. Roger King asked the Paymaster General if he will estimate the number of hotels operating in each of the tourist board regions in each year since 1978 to date.

Mr. Trippier: No comprehensive information is available on the numbers of hotels in tourist board regions.

62. Mr. Gale asked the Paymaster General whether he will estimate the amount of investment in tourism that took place in 1986 in the area covered by the South East England tourist board.

Mr. Trippier: No comprehensive information on total tourism development in a particular region is available. However, a recent ETB survey of major projects suggested that in the last six months of 1986 at least £135 million worth of tourism and leisure developments was opened or under construction in the South East England tourist board area.

Mr. Bevan asked the Paymaster General if he will estimate the number of new attractions constructed in each of the tourist board regions in each year since 1978, giving in each case details of the principal such attractions.

Mr. Trippier: As my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Lee) stated in his reply to my hon. Friend on 19 March at column 579, no comprehensive information on the number of new attractions constructed in each of the tourist board regions is available.

Small Businesses

42. Mr. Matthew Taylor asked the Paymaster General what plans his Department has for promoting the growth of small businesses in the regions.

Mr. Trippier: Small businesses in the regions are able to benefit from a wide range of assistance, details of which were set out in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester (Mr. Brown) on 9 February at columns 56-60.

In addition to that assistance, the Department of Trade and Industry offers help to businesses of all sizes in the assisted areas. Regional selective assistance is available in the intermediate areas; and both regional selective assistance and regional development grants are available in the development areas. The assistance takes the form of grants which are available for manufacturing or service projects which provide new capital assets and create or safeguard employment in the relevant areas.

Manufacturing Industry

44. Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Paymaster General what was the net loss or gain of manufacturing jobs in Britain and the north-west region respectively in 1986.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Between December 1985 and December 1986 there was a net decrease of 123,000 in the number of employees in employment in manufacturing industries in Great Britain. In the same period there was a comparable decrease of 17,000 in the north-west region.

Some of the decrease in the figures will be the result of the re-classification of jobs such as industrial cleaning, catering, computer services and road haulage, previously done by manufacturer's own employees and now done by sub-contractors. This developing feature of our economy has the effect of exaggerating the extent of the move from manufacturing to service sector employment.

Between December 1985 and December 1986 there was a net increase of 7,000 in the number of self employed in manufacturing industries in Great Britain. Comparable regional figures are not available.

Job Clubs

47. Mr. Evennett asked the Paymaster General how many job clubs have been established in the Greater London area; and how many he expects to be in operation in the same area by the end of the year.

Mr. Lee: There will be 120 job clubs open in Greater London by 31 March 1987, as part of the national expansion to 1,000 job clubs. An examination of the need to expand the number of job clubs beyond 1,000 is now under way.

Regional Employment

57. Mr. Livsey asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on regional differences in employment.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Employment in the regions varies according to the industrial structure and the success with which industries have adapted to change. I am encouraged by the latest figures published earlier this month which show that employment levels are rising and unemployment falling across all regions.

Package Holidays

59. Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Paymaster General what information he has on the marketing of package holidays in Britain through United Kingdom travel agents.

Mr. Trippier: Detailed statistics are not available. However, I understand that a growing number of domestic companies are developing holiday packages based in Britain and marketing them through travel agents.

Budget Proposals

61. Mr. Latham asked the Paymaster General whether he will make a statement on the representations which he has received regarding the effect of the Budget upon the level of unemployment.

Mr. Lee: Since the Budget Statement on 17 March I have received no representations regarding the effects of the Budget upon the level of unemployment.

Self-Employed Persons

Mr. Bruce asked the Paymaster General if he will list each constituency in the United Kingdom in order of the proportion of the self employed according to the most recent information or census.

Mr. Lee: The latest available information comes from the 1981 census of population and is shown in the following table.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Barron asked the Paymaster General what delays there are in the payment of the enterprise allowance scheme; how much money is involved; and how many people are affected.

Mr. Trippier: I am satisfied that the 83,000 people currently in receipt of the enterprise allowance normally receive their allowance on the date payment is due.

Mr. Barron asked the Paymaster General if he will publish the report of the current Manpower Services Commission review into the payments of the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Trippier: I am satisfied with the operation of the current payment system for the enterprise allowance scheme. I have no plans to publish the internal report of an MSC study which is being carried out to ensure that the current system is the most cost effective way of making the payments.

Skillcentres

Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General (1) if he will list the skillcentres (a) open in June 1979 and (b) closed since 1979, and what was the unemployment rate in the local travel-to-work area for each skillcentre (i) in June 1979 and (ii) at the latest date for which figures are available;

(2) for each skillcentre closed since 1979, what was the unemployment rate (a) in June 1979, (b) in the month of closure and (c) at the latest date for which figures are available;

(3) for each skillcentre what was (a) the number of trainees completing courses and (b) the total training hours offered (i) in 1979 and (ii) the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 20 March 1987, c. 642-46]: I regret that the table in my previous reply contained a number of omissions and small errors. Following is the corrected reply:

[1] The unemployment rate is the number of unemployed expressed as a percentage of employees in employment plus the unemployed.

[2] The comparison of unemployment rates is affected by seasonal factors and changes in the collection and compilation of data. Furthermore unemployment statistics are not available for travel-to-work areas in 1979 on the same basis as 1987 because of major revisions to the boundaries in 1984. Statistics for travel-to-work areas as defined in 1978 are available in the Library.

[3] Figures no longer available.

[4] Numbers of trainees completing courses and training weeks offered are not available in 1979.

[5] STA no longer keeps statistics of trainee hours available, the number of training weeks offered is used instead.

[6] The Blaenau, Gwent Skillcentre closed in February 1983. The employment rate in that month in the Ebbw Vale travel-to-work area was 24·3 per cent. This area is now covered by the Blaenau, Gwent and Abergavenny travel-to-work area, and an unemployment rate for this area for February 1983 is not available.

SCOTLAND

Prison Chaplains

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many chaplains of each denomination are appointed to Scottish prisons; and what fees were paid to them from public funds for the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: There are 31 Church of Scotland, 21 Roman Catholic and six Episcopalian chaplains appointed to the Scottish prison service. All appointments are held on a part-time basis. For the financial year 1985-86 a total of £67,851 in fees and £7,282 in travelling and subsistence expenses were paid.

Regional Aid

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide the latest available figure for regional development grant expenditure in Scotland for the year 1986-87, and an estimate of what he expects the final figure to be.

Mr. Lang: Provisional final expenditure on regional development grant in Scotland in 1986-87 is £170·2 million.

Forestry Commission (Land Sales)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Forestry Commission has plans to offer for sale any further areas of land in Sutherland and Caithness.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 384]: Not at present, but several areas are being considered for possible sale.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to ensure that the Forestry Commission gives conservation organisations first refusal when offering for sale parcels of land in areas of high conservation interest; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 384]: Conservation organisations are given preference of opportunity to purchase parcels of land offered for sale by the Forestry Commission in areas of high conservation interest, provided they are able to obtain sponsorship from the appropriate Government Department or agency. This involves the Department or agency certifying that the sale of the land to the organisation concerned, to the exclusion of the public at large, would be particularly in the public interest.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Budget Proposals

63. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he expects to be the effect of the recent Budget proposals on average earnings of the lowest 10 per cent. of earners in 1987-88.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Budget will increase the take-home pay of nearly all wage earners, allowing a much needed reduction in pay settlements and average earnings growth to take place.

64. Dr. Michael Clark asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of new jobs that will be created as a result of the recent Budget proposals.

Mr. MacGregor: Unemployment has fallen by 145,000 over the last six months, the biggest half-yearly fall since 1973. There is every prospect of a further fall through 1987.

Personal Taxation

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table for each year since 1971 showing tax thresholds for each of a one-, two-, three- and four-child family as a percentage of the cut-off points on the income scale at which entitlement to family income supplement is extinguished, and as a percentage of average male manual earnings.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Information is in the tables. A family is entitled to family income supplement if its gross income (excluding child benefit and certain other benefits) falls short of a specified limit, "the prescribed amount". Once family income supplement has been awarded, it remains payable for 12 months even if the family's income subsequently increases. From 1972-73 onwards, table 1 compares the weekly equivalent of the tax threshold with the level of income below which a family making a family income supplement claim in April of each year would be entitled to the benefit. This family would then be in receipt of family income supplement for the whole fiscal year. As family income supplement was introduced in August 1971, the figures for 1971-72 compare the tax threshold with the introductory prescribed amounts.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Soley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish figures on the use of Customs and Excise powers under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act in the same form as used by the Home Office.

Mr. Brooke: Statistics covering the same ground as those produced annually under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act by the Home Office are included by the board of Customs and Excise in its annual report, a copy of which is in the Library.

Finance Bill

Mr. Rhodes James asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Finance Bill will be published.

Mr. MacGregor: The Finance Bill will be published on Wednesday 8 April.

Public Expenditure

Sir David Price asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, following his Budget proposals and the Government's expenditure plans for 1987-88, what percentage of the gross domestic product will be represented by public expenditure, taxation and the public sector borrowing requirement, respectively, in 1987-88; and how these percentages compare with similar figures for 1978-79.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 394]: Following is the information:

Expenditure, Receipts and Borrowing as a percentage of Gross Domestic Product

	1978-79	[1]1987-88
General Government Expenditure	43·2	42·25
Taxes and National Insurance Contributions[2]	33·9	38

Inland Revenue Office, Cumbernauld

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the present staffing establishment is for the Inland Revenue office at Cumbernauld, and the projected establishment for each of the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 394]: The present complement at the Inland Revenue accounts office, Cumbernauld, is 1,110. However, this is currently subject to a review by the Inland Revenue's staffing inspectors, who will make their recommendations by early May. Decisions about any resulting changes in the complement, and staffing projections for the next five years, (to include changes as a result of the introduction of new technology), will be made as soon as possible thereafter. The trades unions concerned will be fully consulted. The Department will also be examining the staffing requirement of the new office in Cumbernauld which is to administer the profit-related pay scheme, details of which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his recent Budget.

Inland Revenue (Lawyers)

Mr. Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the complement of lawyers in the Inland Revenue; how many of these posts are unfilled; and what percentage of lawyers in post have been in the Civil Service for five years or more.

Mr. Lawson [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 394]: The current complement of lawyers in the Solicitor's Office (England and Wales) is 58 and Solicitor's Office (Scotland) five. The latest staff in post in England and Wales is 53, a shortfall of five. There is no shortfall in Scotland. Seventy-five per cent. of the Department's lawyers have been in the Civil Service for five years or more.

Customs and Excise (Lawyers)

Mr. Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the complement of lawyers in the Customs and Excise; how many of these posts are unfilled; and what percentage of lawyers in post have beeen in the Civil Service for five years or more.

Mr. Lawson [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 394]: The complement of lawyers in Customs and Excise is 83: seven of these posts are unfilled. The percentage of lawyers in post with five or more years' service is 63 per cent. Six of the seven vacancies are expected to be filled under a current recruitment exercise.

Manufacturing Industry (Profits)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1957 trading profits of manufacturing industry as a percentage of total profits for all enterprises on (a) a gross basis and (b) net of tax and all allowances and relief.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 396]: The information requested is not available.

Overseas Investment

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for table 13.4 of the 1986 edition of the "United Kingdom National Accounts" a division for the year 1975, 1979 and 1985 between manufacturing and other industrial and commercial companies for overseas securities, for overseas direct and other investment in the United Kingdom, and for direct and other investment abroad; and if he will specify the amount of direct investment in each direction accounted for by retained profits.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 396]: Figures for direct investment in overseas manufacturing companies' securities for all years 1974-1984 are published in table 1.4 of Business Monitor MA4 'Overseas transactions'; information for 1985 is not yet available. No other industrial analysis of the direct or portfolio investment comprising "overseas securities" is available.

The division of "overseas direct and other investment in the United Kingdom" showing the amount of direct investment in manufacturing industry accounted for by retained profit is:

£ million

	Direct investment in overseas manufacturing industry
	Retained profits	Other	Total	Other investment abroad	Total
1975	−133	−59	−192	−956	−1,148
1979	−895	−129	−1,024	−1,775	−2,799

Note: Increase in United Kingdom liabilities shown negative.

The division of "direct and other investment abroad" is:

£ million

	Direct investment in United Kingdom manufacturing industry
	Retained profits	Other	Total	Other investment in United Kingdom	Total
1975	543	−23	520	341	861
1979	873	−118	755	3,339	4,094

Note: Increase in United Kingdom assets shown positive.

Separate information on that part of the total investment shown in each table which is accounted for by retained profits is not available. Figures for 1985 are not yet available.

Earnings

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update to April 1987 the information on net earnings provided in his reply of 10 February to the hon. Member for Fulham (Mr. Raynsford), Official Report, columns 177-78.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 25 March 1987, c. 215]: It is not possible to provide estimates of the levels of earnings of the top 5 per cent. of earners in April 1987 until the 1987 "New Earnings Survey" is published. Results normally become available in the autumn.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Acellular Vaccine

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the cause of the delay in the introduction of the acellular vaccine in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Currie: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the acellular pertussis (whooping cough) vaccine.

The vaccine which has been developed at the Centre for Applied Microbiological Research is ready for testing in children as soon as regulatory requirements on safety are met. That vaccine will be compared with others in clinical trials, and the results of trials in Sweden, France and the United States will also be studied, ensuring that the range of vaccines available have been properly assessed for safety and efficacy before they are introduced generally in this country.

Hospital Construction

Mr. George asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the progress on hospital construction within each of the district health authorities within the West Midlands regional health authority's responsibility; which already announced programmes have been delayed, and why; and if he will make a detailed statement on the extension for the Walsall Manor hospital.

Mrs. Currie: The West Midlands regional health authority is responsible for the management of building schemes contained in its operational capital programme. The hon. Member may therefore wish to write to the chairman of the regional health authority for further information about individual schemes.

I understand, however, that the regional health authority has decided to defer by some nine months the start on site dates of a number of developments. The adjustment of the starting dates arises from a review of the region's £870 million capital programme to ensure that the year-on-year expenditure remains within budget. Recent expenditure has been rising at a higher level than anticipated because of the success in keeping to construction target dates.

Health Strategies

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report progress to date made by Her Majesty's Government towards meeting each of the 38 targets in the "Strategies for Health for All by the Year 2000", as laid down by the World Health Organisation's European office in 1985.

Mrs. Currie: An evaluation of progress towards achieving the targets was carried out in 1985, and copies of the United Kingdom report entitled "UK Evaluation Report of the Strategies for Health for All by the Year 2000" have been placed in the Library. This report showed that the United Kingdom had already achieved a number of targets and was on course to achieving most of the rest by the specified dates. The World Health Organisation has prepared and expects to publish shortly a consolidated report of all the 1985 evaluation reports forwarded by each of the member states in the WHO's European region. In conjunction with other relevant Government Departments we are about to undertake further monitoring of the situation as in 1987 with regard to progress towards achieving the targets in the United Kingdom, in parallel with each of the other member states, for submission to WHO in 1988 and a copy of the United Kingdom report will be placed in the Library when completed.

Burton District Hospital

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why work on the main part of phase II of the Burton district hospital is being delayed; and for how long.

Mrs. Currie: My hon. and learned Friend will be aware that the West Midlands regional health authority is responsible for the management of individual building schemes contained in its operational capital programme. However, I understand that work on the main part of phase II will commence in March 1989. The adjustment of the starting date arises from a review of the region's £870 million capital programme to ensure that the year on year expenditure remains within budget.

National Schizophrenia Fellowship

Mr. John Browne asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will consider increasing the funding to the National Schizophrenia Fellowship from £80,000 to £250,000.

Mrs. Currie: Our current grant to the National Schizophrenia Fellowship will finish on 31 March 1987. An application for a renewal grant was received on 16 February and is under consideration. It is highly unlikely that we shall be able to meet the Fellowship's request for a more than threefold increase in our financial support, even in the knowledge of the good work the organisation carries out. We shall let them have our decision as soon as we are able.

Schizophrenia

Mr. John Browne asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much his Department spends per year on schizophrenia research, treatment and aftercare; and what this figure is as a percentage of the total annual National Health Service budget.

Mrs. Currie: A substantial proportion of the £1 billion annual expenditure on mental illness services is spent on the care and treatment of people with schizophrenia, although statistics are not available centrally to show the precise proportion. Also, we have set aside £6 million over the next three years to establish mental illness development projects in each National Health Service region, and to assist their progress towards improved patterns of care, supplementing three projects on aftercare for schizophrenia which were launched in 1983.

We expect to spend about £0·9 million in 1986-87 on continuing mental illness research projects, a number of which are relevant to the study of schizophrenia. In addition, we have set aside £0·5 million for six new research studies in mental illness—all including people with schizophrenia and one including such people only.

The total gross National Health Service budget for 1986-87 is £18·930 billion.

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the names and addresses of the private nursing homes which he has approved in the Mid-Staffordshire parliamentary constituency.

Mrs. Currie: Health authorities exercise the function of registering nursing homes, and information by parliamentary constituency is not held centrally. Following is a list of homes registered as at 31 December 1986 by Mid-Staffordshire Health Authority, whose area includes my hon. Friend's constituency.

Local Authority Part III Accommodation

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many places there are in local authority part III accommodation.

Mrs. Currie: As at 31 March 1985, the latest date for which firm figures are available, there were 116,080 places in local authority part III homes in England. The provisional figure for 31 March 1986 is 115,700. At 31 March 1985 there were 12,187 people sponsored by local authorities in voluntary and private homes under part III arrangements. The provisional figure for 31 March 1986 is 7,710

Private Nursing and Residential Homes

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many private nursing homes and private residential homes have been registered each year since the scheme began; and how many beds are involved.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. The table gives details of the latest information collected centrally in respect of privately run homes in England registered under the Registered Homes Act 1984:

	Residential Care Homes (at 31 March)		Nursing Homes[1] (at 31 December)
	Homes	Places	Homes	Beds
1985	5,533	84,365	1,833	50,985
1986 (provisional)	6,790	103,500	n/a	n/a

[1] Including homes run by voluntary bodies.

Community Care (Review)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects the review of community care currently being undertaken by Sir Roy Griffiths to be completed; when the report will be published; and if he intends to consult Health Service trade unions and other interested parties on any proposals that emerge.

Mrs. Currie: Sir Roy Griffiths has been asked to complete his review within 12 months of its start in December 1986. We will consider how to carry forward action on the report once we have received it.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many payments of severe weather allowance have been made in Wales this winter.

Mr. Major: Up to 3 March 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, approximately 125,000 £5 weekly payments for exceptionally cold weather were made in Wales.

Fluoridation

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the proportion of five-year-olds who are free of dental caries in South West Avon, West Sussex, South West Thames and other areas of the United Kingdom not yet benefiting from artificially fluoridated drinking water supplies.

Mrs. Currie: Information about the proportion of five year olds free from dental caries in those areas cited by my hon. Friend is not readily available.

Studies which have been carried out contrasting comparable fluoridated and non-fluoridated areas however have consistently shown that the reduction in dental decay is between one third to one half greater in the fluoridated areas than in the comparable non-fluoridated areas.

Maternity Payments

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he proposes to introduce the new lump sum maternity grant of £80 from the new social fund following the withdrawal of the £25 grant on 6 April.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Stevenage (Mr. Wood) on 20 March at column 669.

Family Practitioner Service, Haringey

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the expenditure of the Haringey family practitioner service or its predecessor in (a) 1979, (b) 1983 and (c) at the latest available date; how many medical general practitioners were employed full time on each of those dates; and by what percentage in real terms their salaries increased over the period stated.

Mr. Newton: The information available in relation to the Enfield and Haringey family practitioner committee is as follows:

A. Expenditure on family practitioner services:

1979-80	[1] 16,772,000
1983-84	26,773,739
1985-86	30,971,108

[1] Estimated full year figures. Enfield and Haringey FPC separated from Brent and Harrow FPC during this year.

B. Total number of general medical practitioners in contract with the FPC:

	Responsible	Non responsible
1979	253	[1]
1983	251	388
1987 (March)	258	356

[1] No reliable figure available.

C. Information is not available centrally about actual remuneration for practitioners in contract with individual FPCs. The intended average net income for GMPs in Great Britain increased by 11·5 per cent. in real terms between 1979-80 and 1985-86.

Hospital Services

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many district health authorities throughout Britain are currently (a) without accident and emergency hospital departments and (b) without a general hospital providing acute services within their own boundaries.

Mrs. Currie: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks in precisely the form requested. In 1985, the latest year for which information is available centrally, patient activity in NHS accident and emergency departments was recorded in all district health authorities. All district health authorities contained acute, mainly acute or partly acute hospitals providing acute services within their own boundaries.

Nurses

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to how many practice nurses are currently employed in Haringey by medical general practitioners working in the area.

Mr. Newton: At 1 October 1986 general medical practitioners for whom Enfield and Haringey family practitioner committee was the responsible FPC employed 28 practice nurses (13 full-time equivalents). The figures exclude general medical practitioners practising from health centres for whom information is not available centrally.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Burnley on 23 March, if he will give the cost and specialties for each district listed in the answer.

Mr. Newton: Full details of the nature, cost, specialties concerned and impact of all projects supported by the waiting list fund, including those involving the private sector, were placed in the Library on 23 March.

US Forces (Civilian Hospitals)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many civilian hospital beds in Britain have been allocated for use by the United States Marine Corps in wartime;

(2) how many civilian hospital beds in Britain have been allocated for use by the United States Army in wartime;

(3) how many civilian hospital beds in Britain have been allocated for use by the United States Navy in wartime;

(4) if he will publish the recent agreement with the United States authorities allocating civilian hospital beds in Britain for use by the United States Air Force in wartime.

Mrs. Currie: Although the existence and outline concept of the 1973 United States/United Kingdom Lines of Communication Arrangement has been de-classified, the details are regarded as classified by both the American and British Governments. The Arrangement provides for host nation support to US forces in the event of war involving NATO countries. This includes interim medical care for US military casualties in National Health Service hospitals. The United States are also establishing their own contingency hospitals in the United Kingdom which would be equipped, manned and financed by the American Government, and activated only in a crisis.

Planning for the NHS in time of crisis or war does not include allocating specific civilian hospital beds in Britain for use by any US forces.

Disabled People

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information he has as to how many people with disabilities who live in the Greater London council area are of working age;

(2) what proportion of disabled people are known to be in the London area.

Mr. Major: The information available centrally relates to the numbers of disabled persons by age registered with social services departments as being blind, partially sighted, deaf, hard of hearing or physically handicapped. Registration is voluntary. The registers may lag in reflecting migration or deaths. People with multiple handicaps may also be on more than one register. The latest available data are given in the table.

NHS (Education and Training)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will state, on the basis of the latest available figures, what National Health Service resources were expended on continuing education and training, either provided by the National Health Service or external agencies, on a full-time and part-time basis, in total and in each English region and Wales for the following categories: (a) chiropodists, (b) clinical psychologists, (c) dieticians, (d) medical laboratory scientific officers, (e) midwives, (f) nurses, including health visitors, (g) occupational therapists, (h) orthopaedists, (i) pharmacists, (j) physicists, (k) physiotherapists, (l) radiographers, diagnostic and therapeutic and (m) speech therapists.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is not collected centrally. However the National Health Service Training Authority at the request of the National Health Service Management Board is developing performance indicators to show the resources devoted to National Health Service training and the quantity provided. Information for Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

NHS (Expenditure)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state what are the per capita expenditure figures for each of the following categories in the National Health Service in total and in each English region and Wales for the latest available year: (a) chiropodists, (b) clinical psychologists, (c) dieticians, (d) medical laboratory officers, (e) midwives, (f) nurses, including health visitors, (g) occupational therapists, (h) orthopaedists, (i) pharmacists, (j) physicists, (k) physiotherapists, (l) radiographers, diagnostic and therapeutic and (m) speech therapists.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is not available for England. Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Drugs (Licensing and Surveillance)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on drug licensing and surveillance by the medicines division of his Department;

(2) if he will introduce legislation leading to the establishment of an independent medicines board with appropriate financing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Government have no plans to change the arrangements for the licensing and control of medicines. We have recently set up a review "to examine the issues for DHSS arising from the continued increases in licence applications and other work under the Medicines Act and to recommend ways of dealing expeditiously with this work, while maintaining adequate standards for the safety, efficacy and quality of human medicines in the United Kingdom".

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is able to announce the appointment of a new director for the national development team for mentally handicapped people; and if he will outline the role of the team.

Mr. Newton: My right hon. Friend has approved the appointment of Mr. Derek Thomas and he will take up his duties on 1 April

Mr. Thomas has been the District Psychologist for North Manchester health authority since July 1984. He has considerable experience — as a practitioner and subsequently in the management, planning and development of services for people with a mental handicap and their families. We look to him to provide effective leadership of the team at this time of major transition from hospital to community services, building on the strengths of the widely experienced panel, and the work of the current acting director Mr. Jim Gardner and his associate director Mrs. Lotte Mason.

The team is in a unique position to provide expert, independent advice to field authorities—not just about existing services but about joint plans and strategies and their effectiveness in building quality assurance into the development of services. We shall also expect the team to play its part in keeping Ministers informed about the state of current services, the nature and direction of change and the implications for policy.

I expect the team to place greater emphasis on its diagnostic role in identifying problems within the areas of authorities seeking the team's advice, drawing their attention to the examples in various parts of the country of excellent programmes and of sensitive and skilful management of change—so that the best use can be made of all available resources (including skilled manpower and general community resources) in developing and maintaining comprehensive good quality services to meet individual needs.

National Health Service (Audit)

Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has received any conclusions on the use of accountancy firms for the statutory audit of National Health Service authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Private sector firms of accountants have been employed as statutory auditors of a small number of health authorities since 1982 as an experiment to determine what benefits might be derived from the involvement of accountancy firms in the statutory audit of National Health Service authorities which until then had been undertaken entirely by Departmental audit staff.

A comprehensive review of the experiment has now been completed by a steering group, the membership of which included the head of the Government accountancy service, senior members of the staff of the National Audit Office and of the Audit Commission, and the director of the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy. I have now considered their report, and I have accepted their main recommendation that the continued involvement of private firms can be of benefit to the whole statutory audit process, and that in future up to 50 statutory audits shall be undertaken by five audit firms. The statutory audit of the remainder of the National Health Service will continue to be carried out by the Department's audit staff.

Preparations are now being made to invite competitive tenders for these audits, in order to make appointments to commence with the audit of the accounts for 1987-88.

Local Offices, Peckham

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 19 February 1987, Official Report, column 820, why premises at 72 Rye lane, Peckham, were considered suitable for occupation by the task force if the ventilation system renders the premises inadequate for use as a Department of Health and Social Security office.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

The premises at 72 Rye lane was used by the Department of Health and Social Security as accommodation for about 100 staff until June 1986. The Department of Employment, which had an urgent need for temporary accommodation for their North Peckham task force, then occupied a small part of the premises. The Department of Employment consider that the defects in the ventilation system do not represent a serious problem in view of the lower density of occupation and the working methods of the task force.

Private Medicine

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state the total income received from private patients for each year since 1979 by each health district region by region.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 19 January 1987, c. 430]: Regional figures for income under section 65 (private in-patients) and section 66 (private out-patients) of the National Health Service Act 1977 were given in my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member on 18 March 1987 at columns 508-14.

District figures for the years 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85, and 1985-86 were given in the replies to the hon. Member on 6 June 1984 at columns 201-205; 25 November 1985 at columns 483-92 and 5 February 1987 at columns 816-26, respectively. District figures are not held centrally for years before NHS restructuring on 1 April 1982.

Private Medical Care

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list by district health authority and by local authority (a) the number of people placed by them in private psychiatric units on a day care basis, (b) the number of people placed by them in private psychiatric units as residential patients and (c) the average length of stay for each patient placed in residential care in private psychiatric units for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 6 March 1987, c. 722]: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the Information he seeks in precisely the form requested. The information available centrally is given in the tables.

Meningitis

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what factors he takes into account when deciding whether to provide funding for meningitis research; what plans he has to increase the number of different studies of meningitis for which he provides funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 16 March 1987, c. 412]: The Department is always prepared to consider well-founded proposals for research on any matter related to the health services, subject to funds being available, as is the Medical Research Council (which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science) when such research is biomedical. Research projects are always submitted for assessment by independent scientists on (a) their likelihood of success (b) the quality of the science involved (c) whether they are new work or repeats of work already done, and (d) their ethical suitability.

Proposals for medical or scientific studies must come from the professionals in the appropriate fields, but on meningitis the MRC plans a meeting of experts from which we hope will come advice on areas which are likely to lead to productive research.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what initiatives he has taken to raise the level of public awareness of the symptoms of meningitis.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 16 March 1987, c. 412]: Meningitis in its various forms tends to occur sporadically and unpredictably. Consequently, it is mainly for health authorities to consider the extent and timing of any initiatives to remind professionals and inform parents of the symptoms and the treatment available. As my noble Friend has advised on several occasions when asked about meningitis, parents who feel their children are ill — particularly with high fever — should not hesitate to contact their doctor quickly. We are aware that one authority, Gloucester, has produced an excellent leaflet on meningitis for distribution to parents and has made its text available to other authorities. The Department is now urgently considering how best this leaflet might be adopted for more general use.

West Middlesex Hospital

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure that the West Middlesex hospital does not refuse emergency admissions from the London Ambulance Service.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 27 March 1987, c. 305]: Emergency admissions to the West Middlesex university hospital are a matter for the Hounslow and Spelthorne health authority. The hon. Member may wish to approach the chairman of Hounslow and Spelthorne district health authority to discuss the current emergency admissions policy.

Placentas (Disposal)

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what relationships are established between National Health Service maternity hospitals and private sector companies and institutes regarding the disposal of placentas; what is the cost to the National Health Service of such arrangements; and what is the procedure for informing patients.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 30 March 1987]: Information is not available centrally about the arrangements made by individual health authorities.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Medical Graduates

Mr. Dicks asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether graduates of medical facilities in the Republic of Ireland obtain principal general practice posts in Northern Ireland after serving a pre-registration house officer year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Doctors who have obtained their primary medical qualifications in the Republic of Ireland who are nationals of member states of the European Community other than the United Kingdom and have completed a pre-registration house officer year are eligible for appointment to principal general practice posts in Northern Ireland. United Kingdom nationals who obtained their primary medical qualifications in the Republic of Ireland must be vocationally trained for three years to be eligible for appointment to principal general practitioner posts in Northern Ireland.

General Practitioners

Mr. Dicks asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (a) how many principal general practitioners posts there are in Northern Ireland, (b) how many general practice principals are graduates of medical schools in the Republic of Ireland and (c) in what way the requirements for principal general practitioner posts differ as regards experience, as between Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Following is the information:

(a) There were 905 principals in general practice in Northern Ireland at 1 March 1987.

(b) The information is not available readily and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

(c) Doctors who are nationals of the United Kingdom must have successfully completed three years' vocational training under the requirements of the Medical Practitioners (Vocational Training) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1979. At present there is no corresponding requirement in the Republic of Ireland.

Kilkeel Parades (Policing Costs)

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the estimated cost of policing the parades on 17 March in Kilkeel, County Down.

Mr. Scott: Approximately £43,000.

Well Women Clinics

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many well women clinics there are in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: No information is held centrally on the number of well women clinics in Northern Ireland.

Workplace Nurseries

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action the Government have taken to encourage the provision of workplace nurseries in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: The provision of workplace nurseries is a matter for individual employers.

Government policy in relation to its own employees is to undertake, in co-operation with trade unions, pilot surveys to assess demand for child-care facilities in particular locations; thereafter Departments are encouraged to view sympathetically any proposals that emerge and to consider co-operation with other employers.

A pilot survey has been completed in the Stormont estate complex and the findings have been considered by a joint management/union working party. The report of the working party is now being examined by the Department of Finance and Personnel.

Higher Education

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of (a) 18-year-old women and (b) 18-year-old men participate in higher education in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: The estimated proportions of 18-year-old Northern Ireland domiciled women and men in full-time higher education in the United Kingdom in 1985-86 were 7·5 per cent. and 5·7 respectively. The proportions attending institutions within Northern Ireland were 5·5 per cent and 4 per cent. for women and men respectively.

Nurseries

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the level of provision of nurseries for children aged up to five years in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: At 30 June 1986 (the latest date for which figures are available), community and voluntary groups, employers and private individuals registered with the health and social services boards under the Children and Young Persons Act (Northern Ireland) 1968 were providing 12 nurseries offering places for 384 children.

Heavy Goods Vehicles (Parking)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what existing regulatory restrictions there are in relation to the parking of heavy goods vehicles in residential areas; and if he has proposals further to restrict such parking.

Mr. Needham: There are no existing regulatory restrictions that deal with the parking of heavy goods vehicles in residential areas specifically.

The parking of such vehicles overnight on public roads and on verges, between carriageways and on footways is, however, governed by general legislation.

There are no proposals at present to extend these provisions.

Short Brothers

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the members of the board of directors of Short Bros.; when they were appointed; and by whom.

Mr. Viggers: The information requested is as follows:

Directors	Date of appointment
Sir Philip Foreman CBE	1965
Sir John Sparrow	1984
Sir Sidney Bacon CBE	1980
F. F. H. Charlton CBE	1958
A. R. Manvell OBE	1982
D. M. McCallum CBE	1981
R. W. R. McNulty	1978
A. F. C. Roberts OBE	1980
H. E. Trevan-Hawke	1970

Sir Philip Foreman was appointed managing director of the board in 1967 by board resolution. The remaining directors were appointed or re-appointed by the Department of Economic Development.

Potatoes

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the market support prices for potatoes to apply in Northern Ireland for the 1987-88 crop year beginning on 1 July have been determined.

Mr. Viggers: Following consultation with the Ulster Farmers Union it has been decided that there should be no change for the 1987-88 crop to the level of market support that applied in 1986-87. The maximum target price for the 1987-88 season will remain at £46 per tonne. The target area for Northern Ireland planting is 12,750 hectares and the ceiling for any support operations is 60,000 tonnes.

I believe these levels will provide growers with a reasonable degree of support should it be necessary to introduce potato market support measures. I would hope that support measures will, however, not be necessary and I look to producers to make a positive contribution to market equilibrium by avoiding over-planting.

TBTO Leak (Lough Neagh)

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement regarding the TBTO chemical leak into Lough Neagh; what investigations have been made to determine any effects on eels or fish stocks in the lough or on water supplies; and what action the Government are taking in this matter.

Mr. Needham [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 385]: The Department of the Environment was notified on 30 January of a spillage at Crumlin of 10,000 litres of wood preservative containing 1 per cent. TBTO and 0·5 per cent. Dieldrin. The Department of Agriculture and the Fisheries Conservancy Board were alerted. Action was initiated to contain the spillage and commence clean-up operations. Residents in the vicinity were informed on 31 January. Subsequent sampling indicated that the measures taken had largely been successful in containing pollution to the factory complex and the Lennymore bay area in lough Neagh. The Department of Agriculture continues to sample eel and fish stocks and there has been no evidence of any fish kills. Regular analysis of water from the Lough put into public supply has not indicated any trace of TBTO or Dieldrin. The Departments of Agriculture and Environment have a joint monitoring programme on Lough Neagh which will indicate any short or long term effects of the spillage and a survey will be initiated on the wildlife in the area. Discussions are currently taking place with the timber firm involved on measures to prevent a recurrence and to ensure containment within the factory site.

European Year of the Environment

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement outlining what plans relating to aspects of Government responsibilities in Northern Ireland have been drawn up with reference to European Year of the Environment.

Mr. Needham [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 385]: Activities in connection with the European Year of the Environment are being co-ordinated through the United Kingdom European Year of the Environment Committee on which Northern Ireland is represented. A calendar of events has been prepared and includes conferences on coastal and marine conservation and on the Lagan Valley, the opening of visitor centres, open days in forest parks and nature reserves and the production of a schools educational programme.

TRANSPORT

Roads (Repairs)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has of the level of repairs outstanding on main roads in Britain in terms of miles and the funding required.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In England renewal works are outstanding for 50 miles of motorway and 218 miles of other trunk road carriageway. The costs of renewal will be about £150 million. In Scotland there is a backlog of about 30 miles of motorway and other trunk roads requiring strutural repairs. The present level of funding should enable the backlogs in England and Scotland to be cleared by about 1992. There is at present no identifiable backlog in Wales. Estimates for local roads are not available.

Road Clearance (London)

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the level of effectiveness of (a) Lambeth, (b) Southwark, (c) Hackney, (d) Islington, (e) Brent and (f) Ealing in acting as his agents in clearing roads during the recent cold spell; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: London boroughs generally coped well in extremely difficult conditions and we have since taken stock with them of the lessons from this experience. I do not think that it would be practicable to make any further assessment of individual performance.

Local Authority Airports (Directors' Salaries)

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the present salaries of the directors of England's local authority airports, and their proposed salaries after 1 April 1987.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Local authority airport directors' salaries are a matter for the local authorities concerned and this information is not available centrally. However, those airports established as companies under the Airports Act or otherwise will be required to publish information on directors' salaries in accordance with the provisions of the Companies Act.

Dorchester Bypass

Mr. Jim Spicer asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to invite tenders for the A35 Dorchester bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Tenders have now been invited. Work is scheduled to begin in late summer, and should be completed by the middle of 1989.

General Lighthouse Fund

Mr. Stott asked the Secretary of State for Transport what were the reserves in the general lighthouse fund as of 31 March 1986.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The 1985-86 accounts of the general lighthouse fund, which will be laid before Parliament when completed, contain no provision for reserves as such but show liquid assets of £32·8 million as of 31 March 1986.

Vehicle Registration Prefix

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the decision to change the month for the annual introduction of the vehicle registration prefix from August to October; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The decision in March 1986 to switch from August to October the annual change in vehicle registration numbering was taken in response to representations from the motor industry. It then became clear that the industry was not in fact in agreement and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State agreed last October to its request for a Government review into alternatives to the present system. He also agreed to leave the year prefix change at August, at least for 1987. The review is now under way.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the United Kingdom share of European Economic Community exports of goods in Standard Industrial Trade Classifications 5, 6, 7 and 8, respectively, in 1979, 1985 and the latest period of 12 months for which figures are available; and what information he has as to how these compare with the share held by Germany, France and Italy.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year from 1957 gross and net domestic fixed capital formation by manufacturing industry at current and at 1980 prices.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 361]: The requested information is shown in the following table:

Notes:

1. Except for the figures in brackets, which include leased assets, the table excludes expenditure on assets leased to manufacturers from the financial industries, since this information is not available for net domestic fixed capital formation nor, before 1975, for gross domestic fixed capital formation. Prior to 1975 finance leasing to manufacturers is thought to have been small or negligible.

2. Figures of net domestic fixed capital formation for 1986 are not yet available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in which years since 1957 gross fixed investment in plant and machinery in manufacturing industry in real terms has exceeded the 1979 level; and if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing on the basis of 1979 = 100 the amount of real investment in plant and machinery in each year since 1957 by manufacturing industry.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 361]: Gross fixed investment on plant and machinery at 1980 prices has not exceeded the 1979 level in any year in the period from 1957.

Enterprise Education

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, of the funds made available to the Royal Society of Arts during Industry Year 1986 to publicise the importance of Enterprise Education, (a) how much and (b) what proportion of the total amount was spent on (i) publicity materials in schools in the United Kingdom (ii) publicity materials in schools in Wales and (iii) publicity materials in the Welsh language.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 31 March 1987]: The Government made funds available to the Royal Society for the encouragement of arts, manufacturers and commerce, during Industry Year 1986, to increase awareness of the role of industry and its service to the community. These were spent on all aspects of the campaign. £300,000 (29 per cent.), exclusive of staff costs, design and other overheads was spent on materials for schools in the United Kingdom. These were distributed to all schools including those in Wales. Figures for supply to schools in Wales cannot be separately identified. £11,696 (1·1 per cent.) was spent on translating and printing schools materials in the Welsh language.

DEFENCE

British Military Hospital, Dharan

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence what were the full costs of running the British military hospital in Dharan, Nepal in 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 382]: The full running costs of the British military hospital Dharan, Nepal were:

Financial year	£
1984-85	1,153,600
1985-86	1,362,300

Figures are reported by financial years only.

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the British military hospital in Dharan, Nepal.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 382]: All defence programmes, including those in Nepal, are kept constantly under review. However, no decision has been taken on the future of BMH Dharan.

PRIME MINISTER

Road Safety

Mr. Sheerman asked the Prime Minister what action she purposes to take, in the light of her message to the member states of the European Community, the Commission and the European Parliament in European Road Safety Year, to implement and seek further solutions aimed at reducing the frequency and severity of road accident casualties both nationally and in conjunction with European Economic Community members.

Mr. Biffen: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport will soon be reporting to Parliament the outcome of the Government's review of road safety policy. The main conclusion to emerge from the review—that available resources be directed towards proven and cost-effective means of reducing road casualties—is already being reflected in increased funding for low-cost road safety engineering and for road safety research.

Within the Community we shall continue to work with our partners on issues which require action at international level, particularly vehicle safety. We are also expanding bilateral exchanges where we can learn from the experience of countries which have developed effective ways of reducing casualties.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Gazumping

58. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Attorney-General what steps he proposes to take to stop the practice of gazumping in England and Wales.

The Attorney-General: The Law Commission's report on "Subject to Contract" agreements (Law Com. No. 65, published in 1975) concluded that legislation to impose civil or criminal liability for "gazumping" would be counter-productive. The Government hope that buyers and sellers of houses and flats will give favourable consideration to the pre-contract deposit agreement recommended by the conveyancing standing committee in January last.

Court Proceedings (Documentary Evidence)

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Attorney-General what representations he has received on proposals to give the judiciary a complete discretion to decide whether documents given in evidence in court should remain confidential; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: By the close of the consultation period on 20 March the Lord Chancellor had received 27 replies to his consultation paper proposing amendments to the "Rules of the Supreme Court" to give effect to the friendly settlement reached in the case brought by the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) against the United Kingdom. Six of those replies express the view that the amendments give too much discretion to the judges. Changes will be considered in the light of the comments received, but it is an express term of the settlement that it will continue to be possible for a document to be subject to an order preventing its disclosure otherwise than to the parties to the action.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Officers (Medical Protection)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the procedure laid down by his Department for the protection of the prison officers involved with prisoners in the custody of Her Majesty's prisons who are known to be AIDS victims or carriers of that virus;

(2) if he will make a statement on the procedure laid down by his Department for the protection of the prison officers involved with prisoners in the custody of Her Majesty's Government who are known to be hepatitis B victims or carriers of that virus.

Mr. Mellor: The procedural guidance issued by the prison department provides for infected prisoners who are ill (in the acute phase of hepatitis B infection or suffering from symptoms of AIDS or an AIDS-related condition) to be located either in a prison hospital or removed to National Health Service facilities. For both hepatitis B and HIV carriers who are asymptomatic certain regime restrictions have been advised, the precise restrictions applied in a particular case being a matter for the medical officer. Arrangements have also been introduced which enable appropriate staff to be informed, in such a way that medical confidentiality is preserved, of cases in which restrictions have been applied. Other measures taken include guidance on procedures to be followed in the event of incidents involving risk of exposure to infection, and the introduction of arrangements under which health care staff are offered the opportunity to be vaccinated against hepatitis B.

Greater London

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements exist within his Department, within the central headquarters or in any regional or sub-regional organisation, for dealing with his responsibilities regarding public services or any other function in respect of the Greater London area; and how many full-time equivalent staff are involved in such work.

Mr. Hurd: I have well established consultative and other arrangements for assisting in the discharge of my duties with regard to the various services for which I have responsibility. However, these generally relate to England and Wales as a whole and it would not be possible to identify separately those relating exclusively to Greater London or the numbers of staff which are involved.

Seven officials work full-time on duties in connection with my responsibilities for the Metropolitan police. But the police department is organised on a functional basis and all its officials are available to advise me depending on the matter under consideration.

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department with which Departments and non-departmental bodies his Department, and its related non-departmental public bodies, has consulted during 1986-87 in respect of services provided within Greater London; approximately how often such consultations have taken place; and what issues were discussed.

Mr. Hurd: I regularly consult many other Government Departments and non-departmental bodies in connection with the discharge of my duties; these consultations take place as and when necessary. The Treasury and the Department of the Environment are consulted regularly on aspects of Metropolitan police resources. It would be possible to provide the other detailed information requested only at disproportionate expense.

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there are any proposals to change the arrangements for discharging his Department's responsibilities regarding public services or any other function in respect of the Greater London area during the forthcoming year.

Mr. Hurd: No.

Airports (Passport Checking)

Mr. Bill Walker asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he has any plans to include airlines in the bodies authorised to inspect intending passenger passports;

(2) if he has any plans to introduce legislation to allow airlines the right to inspect passports of intending passengers.

Mr. Waddington: Airlines are already able to examine the documents of passengers leaving the United Kingdom on their flights. We have no plans to introduce legislation for this purpose.

Prisoners (Violence)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many attacks there have been by one prisoner on another in any penal establishment in each of the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: Information is not available in the form requested. The following table relates to adjudications in prison department establishments in each of the years 1981 to 1985 where an inmate was charged with an offence of gross personal violence to another inmate, or of assault upon another inmate, or with an attempt to commit such an offence.

Rate Defaulters

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many rate defaulters have been sent to prison in each of the last 10 years; and what were the average maximum and minimum sentences.

Mr. Mellor: Information on the number of persons received on committal by magistrates' courts in default of payment of rates in each of the last 11 years is published annually in "Prison Statistics England and Wales" (table 6.2 of the latest volume, for 1985, Cmnd. 9903). The following table gives details of the length of committal of those received in 1975, 1980 and 1985 on committal by all courts. Further information could be supplied only at disproportionate cost. Data for 1986 are not yet available.

South West Africa People's Organisation

Mr. William Shelton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received any complaints in the last year concerning Oxfam's alleged support in the United Kingdom of the South West Africa People's Organisation.

Mr. Mellor: Correspondence has recently been received mentioning a possible link between Oxfam and the South West Africa People's Organisation. This is being considered by the Charity Commission.

Charities (Political Activities)

Mr. William Shelton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received any complaints concerning the alleged political activities of charities, and of Oxfam in particular.

Mr. Mellor: Such complaints are received from time to time. They are a matter for the Charity Commission which has issued detailed guidelines on political activities by charities.

Immigration

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases since 1983 he has refused to accept a recommendation from an adjudicator that he reconsider an application outside the immigration rules.

Mr. Waddington: Whenever an adjudicator makes such a recommendation, the case is always fully and carefully reconsidered. Any decision not to exercise the use of discretion in an appellant's favour outside the immigration rules is taken at a senior level in the immigration department or, where appropriate or where an hon. Member has made representations on the appellant's behalf, at ministerial level. Statistics of the outcome of such cases are not separately maintained.

Mr. John Fleming

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to seek to secure the extradition from the United States of Mr. John Fleming; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Mr. Fleming was deported from the United States to this country on 26 March.

Police Computers

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with, and what advice was received from, the Data Protection Registrar relating to the accessibility of fingerprints held on police computers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. We are satisfied that the arrangements for access to fingerprint images held on police computers comply with the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with, and what advice was received from, the Data Protection Registrar in relation to the proposed new police computers; and if he has any plans to amend the Data Protection Act in consequence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. Police computer systems are subjects to the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984 and any new application on the police national computer (or any other police computer which contains personal data) will be registered, as appropriate, under the Act.

Animal Procedures Committee

Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now announce the composition of the Animal Procedures Committee under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Mr. Hurd: I have now appointed the Animal Procedures Committee under section 19 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) At 1986, acting jointly with the Department of Health and Social Services for Northern Ireland under section 29 of the Act. The new committee replaces my non-statutory Advisory Committee on Animal Experiments. I am most grateful to all who served on the advisory committee for the invaluable advice they have given to successive Home Secretaries, and to a number of its members for agreeing to join the Animal Procedures Committee, which has been appointed as follows:

Professor D. G. T. Williams (Chairman), Rouse Ball Professor of English Law and President of Wolfson College, Cambridge.

Dr. Michael Balls, Reader in Medical Cell Biology, Nottingham University and Chairman of the Trustees of th Fund for the Replacement of Animals in Medical Experiments.

Mr. Edward Bernard FIAT, Oxford Laboratory Animal Colonies, Bicester.

Mr. Jason Brice, Consultant Neurosurgeon.

Dr. Roger Brimblecombe, Vice President of Smith, Kline and French Laboratories.

Mr. Henry Carter, Veterinary Surgeon.

Dr. Charles Coid, Head of Division of Comparative Medicine, Clinical Research Centre, Northwick Park, Harrow.

Professor Anthony Dayan, Professor of Toxicology, St. Bartholomew's Hospital Medical College.

Professor Gordon Dunstan, formerly Professor of Moral Theology, King's College, London.

Mr. Roger Ewbank, Director of the Universities Federation for Animal Welfare.

Mr. T. G. Field-Fisher, QC, Chairman of RSPCA Legal Committee.

Dr. Judith Hampson, formerly Animal Experimentation Officer of the RSPCA, now freelance Consultant.

Mr. Clive Hollands, Secretary to the Committee for the Reform of Animal Experimentation.

Sir Andrew Huxley OM FRS, Master of Trinity College, Cambridge.

Professor Sheila Jennett, Professor of Physiology, Glasgow University.

Dr. John Ledingham, Reader in Medicine, Oxford University.

Dr. Brian Newbould, Research Director of ICI Pharmaceuticals.

Professor Lawson Soulsby, Professor of Animal Pathology, Cambridge University and past-President of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons.

Professor Peter Venables, Professor of Psychology at York University.

We intend to make one further appointment to the committee presently.

It is the committee's duty under the Act to advise me and the Department of Health and Social Services for Northern Ireland on such matters concerned with the Act and our functions under it as the committee may determine or as we may refer to it. The committee is required in its consideration of any matter to have regard both to the legitimate requirements of science and industry and to the protection of animals against avoidable suffering and unnecessary use in scientific procedures; and to make an annual report on its activities. I am required to lay the report before Parliament and, under section 21of the Act, to consult the committee before issuing or altering guidance on the operation of the Act and codes of practice on the care and use of animals. The advice of the committee will also be sought on all applications for licences for projects involving cosmetics, microsurgery, and the testing of tobacco products on conscious animals. I am very grateful to Professor Williams and all his colleagues for letting us have the benefit of their considerable expertise in the new committee which has a most important role to play in the rigorous system of controls established by the Act.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on his Department's recently published crime statistics.

Mr. Mellor: A number of letters from members of the public have been received in the Department about the latest statistics. Figures are, however, not readily available.

Channel Islands (Defence and International Representation)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the response of the island authorities of Jersey and Guernsey to the Government's request for the islands to make voluntary annual contributions towards the costs of defence and international representation undertaken by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hurd: I am pleased to announce that both Jersey and Guernsey have responded positively to the request.

As from 1 April 1987, Guernsey will assume from Her Majesty's Government the responsibility for the maintenance of the Alderney breakwater (completed in 1865 to shelter the British fleet, make an annual contribution towards the cost of maintaining the Royal Naval port headquarters in Guernsey and remit fees collected for the issue of passports in Guernsey, in all amounting to approximately £700,000 in 1987-88.

In determining the form of its contribution, Jersey has voted to establish on the island a Territoral Army unit whose costs it will bear. Detailed discussions on the feasibility of this are being undertaken urgently between representatives of the Jersey States and the Ministry of Defence. In the interim, Jersey has made a cash contribution of £800,000.

Agreement has also been reached with both island authorities that they should pay the costs of international representation undertaken by the United Kingdom specifically on the islands' behalf.

ENERGY

Waddilove Report

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Energy with which individuals and organisations he has had consultations about the recommendations of the Waddilove report on subsidence damage.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend and I have consulted colleagues in other Government Departments, the National Farmers Union and British Coal. We have also received written representations from a range of individuals and interested organisations.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Benefits

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total amount paid out in state benefits, including mortgage interest relief, to people earning more than (a) the national average wage and (b) two thirds of the national average wage at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: In 1985-86, the estimated cost of mortgage interest relief in the United Kingdom to people with taxable incomes above two thirds average gross adult male full-time earnings (£130) was £4 billion. About £3 billion of this was to people with taxable incomes above average earnings (£195). On the same income basis, the corresponding social security expenditures in Great Britain were £7·2 billion and £3·9 billion in 1985.

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to raise the level of the amount of charitable income that can be disregarded for supplementary benefit purposes.

Mr. Major: We have no plans to raise the level of the amount of charitable income that can be disregarded for supplementary benefit purposes. However, we shall be putting forward proposals to increase the amount of any voluntary or charitable payment that can be disregarded in the new income support scheme from April 1988 from £4 to £5 a week. The disregard level will apply also to the new housing benefit and family credit schemes.

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for tables 5.14 and 5.15 of the latest issue of "Social Trends" the median figure for gross earnings on the horizontal axis and the actual figures and percentages for each category on the vertical axis at that level of earnings.

Mr. Major: The information is as follows:

July 1986

	Median earnings[1] £	Total income support[2] £	Replacement ratio[3] percentage
Family type
Single person (householder)	187	100·06	30

adult male full-time employees for all family types except single person plus child adult female full-time employees for single person plus child.

Mentally Ill and Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many places there are in local authority homes and hostels for mentally ill and mentally handicapped people.

Mrs. Currie: The Department's booklets "Homes and Hostels for the Mentally Ill and the Mentally Handicapped", copies of which have been placed in the Library, give the number of places provided for mentally ill and mentally handicapped people in homes and hostels provided by local authority social services departments at 31 March each year. The latest available figures, for 31 March 1985, are 4,363 places for mentally ill people and 15,152 places for mentally handicapped people.

The hon. Member will be aware that the great majority of mentally ill people who are living in the community live in ordinary family homes. Others have their home in housing, including group homes, provided by local authority housing departments. We cannot give figures as these are not identified in central statistics. Mentally handicapped people similarly live in a range of alternative forms of housing, including small NHS units in the community.

Cancer

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the number of deaths in England and Wales from each form of cancer, broken down for men and women, for each of the last 10 years up to the latest year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: The information is contained in table 2 of the OPCS annual volume "Mortality Statistics—cause", England and Wales, series DH2 (Her Majesty's Stationery Office). Copies for each year 1976-84 inclusive can be found in the Library. The figures for 1985 are shown in the table.

Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received in the current year concerning the implementations of the Disabled Persons Act 1986.

Mr. Major: Since the beginning of 1987, 60 written representations have been received from organisations or individuals relating to implementation of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986. I also met representatives of the local authority associations on 24 February to discuss a number of issues relating to the implementation of the Act and today, at their request, I met members of the steering group of major disability organisations which has been set up to monitor implementation.

Fluoridation

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what financial assistance has been given from central Government funds for the capital costs of the installation of fluoridation plants following the passage of the Water (Fluoridation) Act 1985;

(2) what additional public expenditure has arisen from the Water (Fluoridation) Act 1985.

Mrs. Currie: There has been no additional public expenditure arising from the passage of the Water (Fluoridation) Act 1985. The Department has continued to provide some financial assistance to health authorities with the capital costs of fluoridation schemes that were agreed prior to 1985, as it has done since 1975. In the financial year 1985-86 this assistance amounted to £285,000 and to £262,000 in the current financial year.

Pensioners (Benefits)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the cost in a full year at 1987-88 rates of (a) increasing the state pension by £5 per week for single and £8 for married persons, respectively, and (b) increasing supplementary benefits for pensioners between mid-December and the end of March by £5 per week to cover fuel bills.

Mr. Major: The estimated cost (a) of increasing the state pension (retirement, invalidity and widow's pension, supplementary pension and the linked needs allowance for housing benefit) by £5 a week for single and £8 a week for married persons would be £2·7 billion in a full year, (b) of paying £5 a week between mid-December and the end of March to those pensioners currently receiving supplementary benefit would be £150 million; there could also be a substantial extra cost in respect of other pensioners who would then become entitled to supplementary pension during the winter months.

Motability

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to review the criteria for eligibility to Motability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Motability is an independent voluntary organsiation set up in 1977 with Government support, specifically to help disabled people in receipt of mobility allowance to exchange the cash benefit for a vehicle.

In view of Motability's independent status any review of the criteria for eligibility under the scheme would be essentially a matter for Motability itself in conjuction with the Department which meets the organisation's administration expenses. There are, however, no plans for such a review at present.

Benefits (Age Limit)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the age at which young people are entitled to claim social security payments on their own behalf in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other OECD countries.

Mr. Major: In all countries social security payments under contributory benefits schemes depend primarily on the individual's contribution record, which is normally a function of length of time in covered employment. The minimum age for the payment of contributions to the United Kingdom national insurance scheme is 16.

Payment of non-contributory benefits is much more various. The age at which child allowance ceases ranges between 16 and 27 in the countries referred to, and is linked with the status—student, trainee or other—of the young person. This clearly influences the age at which social welfare payments can be made available to the young person on his own behalf. There may in any case be a gap between the end of the child allowance and entitlement (if any) to welfare payments during which a young person is still considered dependent on his parents. In some countries (for example, United States of America, Denmark, Germany, the Netherlands, Switzerland) young people without dependants have no entitlement to social welfare payments.

In the United Kingdom child benefit continues to age 19 if the young person is in non-advanced education. Young people aged over 16 are eligible to claim supplementary benefit in their own right from fixed dates at the end of the holiday following the term in which they complete their full-time non-advanced education.

NHS Finance

Mr. Peter Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been total National Health Service spending in monetary and real terms annually since 1974 (a) nationally, (b) for the Wessex regional health authority area and (c) following reorganisation, for the Portsmouth and Southampton district health authority areas; and if he will provide a breakdown of these figures between capital and revenue expenditure in each case.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether any consideration is being given to amending supplementary benefit regulations for people aged over 50 years to allow higher part-time earnings before supplementary benefit is reduced; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will estimate the cost of raising the earnings limit to £20 per week for people aged over 50 years, before supplementary benefit is reduced; how many people he estimates would benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: We have no present plans to increase the amount that people, including those aged over 50, can earn before supplementary benefit is reduced. To increase the limit to £20 for all those in this age group including those who are already receiving supplementary benefit would give increased entitlement to some 35,000 people at a cost of £20 million a year. We do not have a reliable estimate of the number who might be brought into entitlement or what the additional cost might be.

For the future we have announced proposals for changes in the levels of disregards of earnings in the income support scheme that replaces supplementary benefit from April 1988. The standard disregard would be increased from £4 to £5 a week although the separate disregard of work expenses would end. There would be a higher disregard of £15 a week for couples who have been unemployed two years, lone parents and those qualifying for the disability premium.

Social Security Advisory Committee (Report)

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the Social Security Advisory Committee will be publishing its next annual report.

Mr. Lyell: I understand that the Social Security Advisory Committee's Fifth Report is being published today. Copies are available in the Vote Office.

Cervical and Breast Cancer Screening

Mr. Stevens asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what further action he is taking to ensure the effective implementation of the Government's policies for cervical and breast cancer screening.

Mr. Fowler: I have asked Sir Roy Griffiths, deputy chairman of the NHS management board, to lead a small team whose task will be to oversee the implementation of the Government's policy on cervical and breast cancer screening.

Sir Roy and his team will be working with health authorities and family practitioner committees to make sure that they have viable plans, not only for installing computerised call and recall systems, but also to improve take-up of screening and to follow up when women do not respond after being called for screening.

I shall be asking Sir Roy to make regular reports to me so that I can keep the House informed, particularly about progress towards the target date of 31 March 1988 for the cervical cancer screening service throughout England.

TRANSPORT

Noise Insulation Regulations 1975

56. Mr. Ottaway asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to amend the Noise Insulation Regulations 1975; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Later this year we will be laying before the House a minor amendment to the Noise Insulation Regulations in the form of a revision of the 1975 edition of "Calculation of Road Traffic Noise". This technical memorandum is prescribed in regulation 6. It sets out the method and procedure for ascertaining noise levels for the purposes of the regulations.

We are considering other possible amendments to the regulations.

National Bus Company

Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the sale prices of National Bus Company subsidiaries sold off so far.

Mr. David Mitchell: The prices obtained for individual National Bus Company subsidiaries are confidential while sales are in progress. A report will be made to the House in due course on the aggregate proceeds of sale.

Witchford Bypass

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the proposed opening date of the Witchford bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Witchford lies on the A142 principal road. It is for Cambridgeshire county council, as highway authority, to determine when a bypass should be built and opened.

Road Accidents

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the number of deaths and serious injuries on the roads in the last year in Cambridgeshire and Suffolk, respectively.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Road accident information for 1986 will not be available before May 1987. The local authorities concerned may have provisional estimates and my hon. Friend may wish to get in touch with them. Data for 1985 can be found in "Road Accidents Great Britain 1985". A copy is in the Library.

London Underground (Accidents)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many reported accidents have occurred during the past 12 months on trains without guards on the London Transport underground system.

Mr. David Mitchell: Excluding minor injury accidents (which are reported on bulk returns and cannot be related to specific trains or lines) there have been no reported accidents on these trains during the past 12 months.

Exeter-Exmouth Relief Road

Sir Peter Emery asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to bring forward the construction of the new Exeter to Exmouth relief road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The improvement of the A376 Exeter-Exmouth route is a matter for Devon county council as local highway authority.

Wheelchair Passengers

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport which existing construction and United Kingdom regulations apply to community transport vehicles used for conveying wheelchair-bound passengers; if he intends to introduce fresh regulations applying only to new vehicles of this type; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following the recent consultation with interested organisations we shall shortly be issuing a new code of practice on the carriage of passengers in wheelchairs on buses. This new code makes no distinction between community transport vehicles, public service vehicles and private vehicles. It represents the best advice available on how to secure people in wheelchairs on buses. There are no plans to make special regulations for vehicles used to carry people in wheelchairs.

Channel Tunnel Roads (War Cemeteries)

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the implications for British war graves in France of the routes proposed for the construction of certain new roads for Channel tunnel traffic; and what reply he has made.

Mr. David Mitchell: My Department has received two representations on this subject. This is primarily a matter for the French Government, but my understanding is that proposals for new roads connected with the Channel tunnel project could not conceivably affect British war cemeteries in northern France.

Road Assessment Studies (London)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list those organisations he has asked to comment on the terms of reference of stage 2 of the road assessment studies for London;

(2) when he intends to publish the first terms of reference of the stage 2 consultation of the road assessment studies for London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: All 20 local authorities in the study areas are being consulted and the organisations listed have been asked for their views by 19 June. We will also consider comments from anyone else. The final terms of reference will be published once we have considered comments received.

Manchester Airport

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport what reply he is making to the Greater Manchester passenger transport authority's application for section 56 grant towards the cost of a rail link to Manchester airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to have completed his consideration of the application for section 56 grant-aid for the Manchester airport rail link; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: The PTA's application, which I requested in December, was sent to me on 10 March. It does not deal with a number of key issues, such as the way in which it is proposed to share the costs and revenues of the project, and the economic benefits which are claimed to justify the scheme.

I have written today to the chairman of Greater Manchester PTA pointing out these deficiencies and proposing an early meeting between officials to consider the further work which is required.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Student Grants

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate the cost of reducing by one year the age of independence for student grants.

Mr. Walden: The estimated cost of reducing the age of independence to 24 is £3 million.

Higher Education

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has about the percentage of the higher education budget that is allocated to student maintenance in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other OECD countries.

Mr. Walden: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has about the percentage of students in higher education who are living other than in the parental home in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other OECD countries.

Mr. Walden: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Nursery Education

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of three-year-old and what proportion of four-year-old children receive nursery education.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The proportion of three-year-old children receiving education in maintained nursery schools and in nursery classes in maintained primary schools in England in January 1986 was 32 per cent. The corresponding proportion for four-year-olds was 14 per cent. since the majority of this age group are in infant classes.

Class Sizes

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing the number of classes and of pupils in classes of more than 35 pupils for each year since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The number of classes with more than 35 pupils and the number of pupils in these classes in maintained primary and secondary schools in England each year since 1979 is given in the table. The analyses are in respect of classes taught by one teacher on a specified period on the day of the census count in January of each year. The figures may not be representative of the pattern of classes over the academic year as a whole.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how the population of total public expenditure devoted to the education budget in Britain compares with other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries;

(2) how the proportion of gross domestic product spent on the education budget compares with the proportion spent in other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The readily available information is shown in the following table.

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the expenditure per pupil on books and equipment, in cash and constant prices, each year since 1978-79.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information requested is given in the following table.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if any further companies have been approached by his Department to fund city technology colleges; and how many companies have now expressed a willingness to provide funding.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Department has made no entirely fresh approaches to companies since I replied to the hon. Member on 27 February, at column 424, although further progress has been made with some of those which were already discussing the proposals. The answer which I then gave, that I would not confirm offers of support for city technology colleges until sponsors were ready to make their decision public, is still the case.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Official Forms (Welsh Language)

Mr. Wigley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to ensure that the form, "Stamps L(A) 451," used by Companies House in relation to the conveyancing of land, will now be made available generally in the Welsh language and used automatically in all cases where inquiries are received in Welsh, or where a desire to fill in this form in Welsh is indicated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There has been very little demand for this particular Revenue form in Welsh and the expense of producing one would not appear to be justified. Purchasers may give the particulars required by section 28 Finance Act 1931 in Welsh if they so choose.

Government Data Network

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with, and what advice was received from, the Data Protection Registrar in relation to the Government data network.

Mr. Brooke: Preliminary discussions with the Data Protection Registrar took place in September last year. A copy of the service requirement for the network was sent to the Registrar in January. He has agreed to advise and assist in relating the operating procedures of the proposed network to the requirements of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Growth and Manufacturing Output

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been (a) the average rate of growth for the United Kingdom and (b) the average rate of growth in manufacturing output in the United Kingdom for the period 1980 to 1986; and what are the comparable figures in the other members of the G7 group.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 394-95]: The information requested is set out in the table.

Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the years 1975, 1979 and 1985 the information given in tables 11.5 and 11.6 of the 1986 edition of the "United Kingdom National Accounts" in terms of 1980 prices.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 396]: Figures of capital consumption and net domestic fixed capital formation, both at constant 1980 prices, are as follows. Sectoral analyses at constant prices are not available for years up to 1978.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the years 1975, 1979 and 1985 the information for all fixed assets in table 10.3 of the 1986 edition of the "United Kingdom National Accounts" in terms of 1980 prices.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 396]: Figures of gross domestic fixed capital formation at constant 1980 prices are as follows. For years up to 1978 only a broad sector analysis of gross domestic fixed capital is available at constant prices. For recent years, from 1979 onwards, slightly more detailed sectoral analyses are available.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Milk Quotas

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland from what source the extra dairy quota for each of the contending parties in W. and C. Millar versus J. K. Lynn was made available; and on what legal authority it was allocated.

Mr. Viggers: Extra quota is to be made available to W. and C. Millar only. The quota is to be allocated on an extra statutory basis from the regional reserve.

EMPLOYMENT

National Pay Agreements

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General what is his assessment of the implications for (a) the level of migration from one part of the United Kingdom to another and (b) the level of emigration from the United Kingdom of abolishing national pay agreements.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The ending of national pay agreements will enable employers to pay rates of pay that can be afforded by them and are necessary to recruit and retain staff of the required quality in their own locality. This should help to speed up the growth of employment and reduce regional disparities in unemployment, but I do not believe that it would have any discernible effect on migration or emigration.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Paymaster General if he will make the gathering of information on ethnic origins compulsory, and publish the percentage of entrants to his Department who failed to respond to the ethnic origins questionnaire.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Responsibility for the arrangements for ethnic monitoring in the Civil Service lies with the Management and Personnel Office and these are covered in the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 24 March, at column 98. In the period 1 October 1985 to 31 December 1986, 19·4 per cent. of new entrants to my Department failed to respond either to the ethnic origin questionnaire or a reminder.

Community Programme

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General what proportion of the entrants to the community programme in the 12 months to October 1986 and December 1986 were (a) assigned to full-time places, (b) men, (c) single, (d) aged over 25 years, (e) unemployed for over 12 months and (f) formerly benefit claimants.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information requested is given in the table.

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General how many community programme filled places were taken by community programme national initiatives in each category, crime, energy, CRS, FCI, NGF, UK2000 tourism for each Manpower Services Commission region at the most recent date.

Mr. Meacher asked the Paymaster General how much money has been paid in unemployment benefit to people on the community programme to date.

Mr. Lee: Unemployment benefit is not payable to people working full time on the community programme; in general, those working part time have not been eligible for unemployment benefit because they were regarded as working to their full normal extent. However, they may have qualified for other benefits.

Information about benefits paid to people in part-time work is not available because such claims are not separately identified in the central computer records.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table based on the 1984 and 1985 labour force surveys, for each region in Great Britain and for Greater London, by male/female, and claimant status, the numbers of people who had looked for a job in the four-week reference period, and who were available to start work within two weeks.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The available information by claimant status from the 1984 and 1985 labour force survey is given in the following table. The surveys also showed that 938,000 and 1,080,000 people in 1984 and 1985 respectively were claiming benefits, so counting as unemployed in the monthly count, but either had a job or were not looking for work.

It is not possible to provide a reliable analysis of the regional figures by claimant status.

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table, based on the 1985 labour force survey, showing by region including Greater London, and by male and female, the numbers of people who (a) were without jobs and who looked for work in the four weeks before their labour force survey interview and were available to start work within two weeks who (i) wanted full-time jobs, (ii) wanted part-time jobs and (iii) who had no preference, (b) were unemployed according to the standard labour force survey definition who were looking for full-time jobs and the number looking for part-time jobs and the number who had no preference, (c) were in part-time jobs who

Job Training Scheme

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General under what mechanism he proposes to ensure that claimants refusing, or leaving early, a new job training scheme place will not be subject to reference to the benefit authorities and disqualification from benefit under the provisions of the Social Security Act 1976.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The instructions issued to local offices of my Department, the Manpower Services Commission and the Department of Health and Social Security state that there is no disqualification of benefit for not joining or not completing training under the scheme.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if any recruits to the job training scheme are to be over 25 years of age; and what arrangements will be made to pay a training allowance to those recruits who are not entitled to unemployment benefit or supplementary benefit.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 356]: We will be giving priority for places on the job training scheme to those who are under 25 and unemployed for six months or more, but older long-term unemployed people may apply.

If trainees did not receive benefit immediately before starting training, but claimed credits for national insurance contributions, they will receive a training allowance whenever a change in their circumstances would have entitled them to benefit had they remained unemployed.

Availability for Work Test

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General what is the latest estimated number of people who have ceased receiving benefits following the introduction of the availability for work test.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Claimants to unemployment benefits have always been disallowed benefit by independent statutory adjudicating authorities in accordance with long-standing legal rules adopted by successive Governments, when they are not available for work.

If the hon. Member is asking how many claims have been disallowed for this reason since we introduced modified procedures to enforce the existing rules, the answer, as at 27 February 1987, was 8,866 claimants nationally, which is 1·1 per cent. of those at the new claims stage.

Mr. Soley asked the Paymaster General how many people in the London borough of Hammersmith and Fulham have had their unemployment benefit suspended because of the new availability for work test; and what percentage of the unemployment register in that borough they represent.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Under long-standing legal rules adopted by successive Governments it has always been the practice that wherever a doubt arises as to whether a benefit claimant is available for work, payments are suspended until the independent statutory adjudicating authorities decide entitlement.

If the hon. Member is asking how many claims in the London borough of Hammersmith have been suspended in this way since we introduced improved procedures to apply to existing rules, the answer, as at 27 February 1987, is 388 people. This represents 2·6 per cent. of those who have claimed at these offices since the modifications were introduced.

Mr. Soley asked the Paymaster General what action has been taken by local unemployment benefit officers to encourage the taking up of alternative benefits, should people prove to be ineligible for unemployment benefit as a result of an availability for work test.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Our improvements in the arrangements for establishing the availability for work of claimants have made it easier for staff in unemployment benefit offices to identify claimants who may be eligible for an alternative social security benefit. We draw the attention of claimants to the existence of such benefits in the explanatory leaflet they each receive and by the posters in benefit offices. Our benefit office staff have been given guidance about those claimants who may be eligible.

In addition my Department's new claimant advisers work closely with our local staff and play an important role in advising claimants about all social security benefits, including those which do not require the claimant to be available for work. Where necessary our claimant advisers will help claimants in making their applications.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will detail the cost of conducting the availability for work test experiment on the over 50s age group of unemployed; and if he will make a statement on the outcome of the tests and plans for extending them nationwide.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 356]: The cost of conducting the improved availability for work test experiment relating to unemployed claimants aged over 50 who sign-on only once a quarter was approximately £3,000.

The results of the experiment were inconclusive and we have no present plans to extend the procedure.

Self-Employed Persons

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General of the 445,000 estimated increase in self-employed individuals between 1983 and 1986 how many were previously (a) employees, (b) unemployed, (c) on the youth opportunities programme/youth training scheme, (d) other special employment measures, and (e) economically inactive.

Mr. Trippier: The estimated 445,000 increase in the number of self-employed persons cannot be classified in the way requested, since it represents the net difference between the numbers entering and leaving self-employment between March 1983 and September 1986.

The published employed labour force series does not identify the previous situation of those entering self employment. However, the labour force survey provides information on a different basis. Preliminary LFS results for the spring of 1986 estimate that of 2,723,000 self-employed persons in Great Britain at that time the great majority had been self-employed one year previously, while 202,000 had been employees, 85,000 unemployed and 92,000 economically inactive. Because of considerations of sample size it is not possible to provide a reliable estimate of the number who had been on Government employment and training schemes a year earlier.

Hotels (London)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General what steps his Department is taking to promote an increase in the supply of low to medium-cost hotel accommodation in London.

Mr. Trippier: My Department is supporting the initiatives being taken by the English Tourist Board, British Tourist Authority and London Tourist Board to follow up the recommendations in the consultancy study which they commissioned last year on "London's Tourist Accommodation in the 1990s". The English Tourist Board is involved in discussions with hotel operators and financial institutions to encourage them to take up opportunities to develop less expensive types of hotel accommodation in London, particularly in non-central areas. In addition, the London tourism forum is actively considering the need for additional hotel capacity in London and the importance of making adequate provision for this in the planning policies of London boroughs.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General what is his Department's estimate of the shortfall in hotel accommodation in the low to medium price bracket in London.

Mr. Trippier: A consultant's report commissioned last year by the English Tourist Board, British Tourist Authority and other sponsors has suggested that while there is no evidence of a current shortage of tourist accommodation in London, there could be a potential overall shortfall of 16,000 to 28,000 rooms by the early 1990s. The ETB estimates that a fairly high proportion of these could be in the low and medium price range.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General what discussions he has had with (a) the British Tourist Authority, (b) the English Tourist Board and (c) the London Visitors' Convention Bureau on the lack of budget class hotels in the capital.

Mr. Trippier: Officials of my Department are in regular contact with all these boards about the measures they are taking to encourage an increase in the supply of London's hotel accommodation so that it is capable of meeting the full range of future tourist demand, including that for low and medium price hotel rooms.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General what information he has as to how many beds in (a) one, (b) two, (c) three, (d) four and (e) five star hotels are now available in the central London areas and as to how this compares with five and 10 years ago.

Mr. Trippier: Neither the English Tourist Board nor the London Tourist Board keeps comprehensive information on the numbers or grades of hotel bedrooms in different areas of London. The information requested is therefore not available.

Workfare

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he is now able to state when he expects his study on Workfare to be completed; and if he will publish the results.

Mr. Lee: I understand that the research study on Workfare by the employment research centre of the University of Buckingham is almost complete, and that the employment research centre expects to publish the results in the near future.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Paymaster General whether he will now arrange for public access to lists of businesses in each Manpower Services Commission board with authority receiving support under the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Trippier: I have no plans to allow public access to lists of businesses supported under the enterprise allowance scheme. Disclosure of this information would require the individual agreement of all participants in the scheme and lists would be administratively expensive to compile and maintain.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Janner asked the Paymaster General how many people other than those from ethnic minorities have been recruited on to the Nottingham panel of the Industrial Tribunals Board over the last nine years for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: There have been 38 people other than those from ethnic minorities who have been recruited on to the Nottingham panel of industrial tribunals since 1982, the first year for which figures are readily available.

Mr. Janner asked the Paymaster General how many people from ethnic minorities now sit on the Nottingham panel of the Industrial Tribunals Board: and how many people sit on that panel who are not members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Lee: There is one panel member on the Nottingham Industrial Tribunals Board who is from the ethnic minorities out of a total membership of 96. One other person from an ethnic minority has recently accepted an invitation to serve.

Mr. Janner asked the Paymaster General what area is now covered by the Nottingham panel of the Industrial Tribunals Board; and what is the estimated population of that area.

Mr. Lee: The area covered by the Nottingham panel of the Industrial Tribunals Board includes Leicestershire; Nottinghamshire except for Bassetlaw; Derbyshire except for High Peak, Bolsover, Chesterfield and north east Derbyshire; east Staffordshire in Staffordshire; Lincolnshire except for West Lindsey and East Lindsey, Lincoln and North Kesteven; and Corby and Kettering in Northamptonshire. The population is estimated at some 3 million.

Mr. Janner asked the Paymaster General how many applications he has received from people from ethnic minorities and from people who are not from ethnic minorities for seats on the Nottingham tribunals board.

Mr. Lee: In 1986, when the current appointments to the Nottingham regional office of the industrial tribunals were made, we received nominations from one person from an ethnic minority and 34 from people who were not from ethnic minorities.

Job Release Scheme

Mr. Greenway asked the Paymaster General if he will announce the results of the review of the rates of allowance payable under both the job release scheme and the part-time job release scheme.

Mr. Lee: Following our annual review of allowances, the rates payable under the job release schemes from 6 April, will be as follows:

Full-time scheme

For disabled men aged 60, 61, 62 and 63 who are married with a dependent wife whose net income from all sources does not exceed £13 a week, £74·50 a week taxable; for all others £61·15 a week, taxable.

For women aged 59 and men aged 64 who are married with a dependent spouse whose net income from all sources does not exceed £13 a week, £67·55 a week, tax free; for all others £53·90 a week, tax free.

Part-time scheme

The part-time job release scheme closed on 30 May 1986. However, rates of allowance for those who entered the scheme on or before that date will be as follows:

For disabled men aged 60 and 61 and men aged 62 and 63 who are married with a dependent wife whose net income from all sources does not exceed £13 a week, £43 a week taxable; for all others £35·80 a week, taxable.

For women aged 59 and men aged 64 who are married with a dependent spouse whose net income from all sources does not exceed £13 a week, £38·05 a week tax free; for all other £31·15 a week, tax free.

Benefits

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he is considering proposals or investigating the feasibility of depriving unemployed 16 and 17-year-olds of the right to claim supplementary benefit.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 26 March 1987, c. 241]: The Government have successfully met their guarantee each year of a place on YTS for all unemployed 16 year olds, and we have now extended that guarantee this year to unemployed 17-year-olds. As a result, from April 1987 onwards there will no longer be a need for anyone under 18 to be unemployed, for everyone will have the choice of a place in school or college or on YTS or a job. We hope that no signficant number of young people will choose to remain unemployed and claim benefit. Any that do so will have to satisfy the long-standing legal rule that they are available for work and actually seeking work before they will receive benefit. We have not taken any decision about the continuing benefit entitlement of under-18s, but we will keep the position under review as we acquire experience of the effect of the new YTS guarantee.

Manpower Services Commission

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Paymaster General if he will publish the names of the members of each of the area manpower boards of the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 354]: I am sending my hon. Friend a copy of the area manpower board membership list and will place additional copies in the Library.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General how many staff are employed in all aspects of paying unemployment benefit and dealing with tribunals and fraud; and how many separate premises they occupy.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 356] Some 29,200 people are currently employed by the unemployment benefit service, of whom approximately 26,400 are directly involved in paying benefits at local offices, 1,000 are engaged in fraud investigation and 600 on the adjudication of benefit claims.

There are 1,100 local unemployment benefit offices, of which some 300 are part-time or offer only limited services.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fish Stocks

55. Mr. Colvin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he has recently taken to maintain and improve fish stocks in the rivers of England and Wales.

Mr. Gummer: Responsibility for maintaining, improving and developing salmon, eel and freshwater fisheries in the rivers of England and Wales, as well as for regulating those fisheries, is placed on the water authorities under the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act 1975. The Government recently took steps to add to the effectiveness of the legislative framework within which the water authorities perform these duties through those sections of the Salmon Act 1986 which apply to England and Wales. They also established the salmon advisory committee earlier this year to examine and advise Ministers on matters relating to the conservation and development of salmon fisheries in England and Wales as well as in Scotland.

Council of Agriculture Ministers

Mr. Andy Stewart asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers' meeting held in Brussels on 30-31 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting, together with my right hon. Friend, the Minister of State.

The Council had a first discussion of the Commission's proposals for agricultural support prices and arrangements for 1987-88. No decisions were reached on these proposals, and the Council will take them up again at its next meeting on 27 April. The marketing years for beef and dairy products, which otherwise would have expired, were therefore extended until 31 May. The Council also decided to continue for a similar period the suspension of part of the French and United Kingdom monetary compensatory amounts on eggs and poultrymeat, thus maintaining the benefit of these arrangements to our producers.

Against a background of the very high cost of the common agricultural policy, which is threatening to exceed budgetary ceilings, I supported the main elements of the proposals, namely a tough policy on the prices themselves, the strengthening and extension of guarantee threshold mechanisms, and a weakening of the support provided through intervention buying. In several areas I felt the proposals did not go far enough in these directions.

I made clear my opposition to certain parts of the proposals: first and foremost to the tax on vegetable and marine oils and flats, which would place a burden on consumers, besides risking a major dispute with overseas suppliers; and also to the proposals to limit the payment of the ewe premium to a given number of ewes per farm, and to end intervention for salted butter.

Dairy Inspection

Mr. Best asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer of 16 March, Official Report, column 417, to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn, if he will set out what other work is included in the definition of statutory work beyond dairy inspection, the constituent elements of subsistent costs including allowances for meals and accommodation; which senior Agricultural Development Advisory Service staff are involved with dairy inspection and what is the extent of their work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The figure of 45·7 man years for statutory work includes not only time which dairy husbandry staff spend on farms but also their travelling time and the time they spend writing up reports, writing to producers and preparing for further visits: it also includes time which grades I and II devote to managing statutory work in order to ensure that the regulations are interpreted consistently across the country. The figure of 1·5 man years reflects the fact that, in addition, some 30 senior ADAS staff located at headquarters, in the regions and in Wales, devote a small proportion of their time to managing statutory work. There are standard, service wide, rates for travel and subsistence.

Greater London

Mr. Squire asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements exist within his Department, within the central headquarters or in any regional or sub-regional organisation, for dealing with his responsibilities regarding public services or any other function in respect of the Greater London area; and how many full-time equivalent staff are involved in such work.

Mr. Jopling: Many aspects of my responsibilities affect the Greater London area as other parts of the country. These are dealt with by the appropriate units such as animal and plant health, horticulture, flood defence and land sales divisions and the south-east and eastern regions. No central record is kept of the manpower used for the Greater London area alone.

Mr. Squire asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food with which Departments and non-departmental bodies his Department, and its related non-departmental public bodies has consulted during 1986-87 in respect of services provided within Greater London; approximately how often such consultations have taken place; and what issues were discussed.

Mr. Jopling: Consultation takes place as and when necessary. No central record is kept of oral or written consultations.

Mr. Squire asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether there are any proposals to change the arrangements for discharging his Department's responsibilities regarding public services or any other function in respect of the Greater London area during the forthcoming year.

Mr. Jopling: There are no such proposals.

International Bee Research Association

Mr. Livsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to reintroduce the grant of £20,000 to the International Bee Research Association formerly given by the Development Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No. My Department's research funds are spent on commissioning specific work, including over £100,000 on topics of interest to beekeepers, rather than on grants to particular organisations.

Dairy Industry

Sir Richard Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce legislation to prevent dairies or dairy farmers from adding a substance to milk to nullify the effect of antibiotics to enable it to be processed into cheese.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

ENVIRONMENT

Inner City Initiatives

Mr. Powley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much his Department has spent on the urban programme and other inner city initiatives since 1979.

Mr. Ridley: Expenditure on my Department's urban group of programmes has more than doubled in real terms from £114 million in 1978-79 to £531 million in 1987-88. Since 1979 more than £3,500 million has in total been allocated to these programmes, generating more than £2,000 million in investment from other resources, including expenditure on the urban programme, urban development grant, urban development corporations and derelict land grant.

Planning Appeals

12. Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of planning applications has gone to appeal in each year since 1979; and what percentage of these appeals has been successful in each year.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information for England is as follows:

Year	Number of planning applications received	Appeals received as percentage of applications received in the year Per cent.	Proportion of appeals decided which were allowed Per cent.
1979[1]	—	—	29·1
1980	527,700	3·1	30·8
1981	450,400	3·7	32·7
1982	399,200	3·5	31·0
1983	428,200	3·2	32·4
1984	427,600	3·8	32·4
1985	430,800	4·0	37·4
1986[1]	—	—	40·5

[1] Full figures for applications received are not available for the calendar years 1979 and 1986.

Only about 2 per cent. of all planning permissions are given on appeal. Between 1983 and 1986 the proportion of planning applications refused by local planning authorities went up from 12·8 per cent. to 14·9 per cent.

Clearance Areas (Compulsory Purchase)

13. Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will be introducing measures to amend the regulations on the compulsory purchase of houses in clearance areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: Proposals to make market value compensation available to all owners of unfit houses, purchased compulsorily, were announced in the Green Paper "Home Improvement — A New Approach". Primary legislation will be necessary and must await a suitable opportunity in the parliamentary timetable.

Planning Circular

16. Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received, to date, about his new planning circular.

Mr. Waldegrave: The consultation period on the draft circular continues until 10 April. I have already received a number of representations from local authority, environmental, farming and business interests and from private individuals.

Greater London House Conditions Survey

18. Mr. Raynsford the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive a copy of the 1985 Greater London house conditions survey.

Mr. John Patten: I have already received a copy.

Derelict Land and Buildings

19. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will introduce a notification system for derelict land and buildings in private ownership that are capable of redevelopment within a subsequent period of five years.

Mr. John Patten: The periodic survey of derelict land carried out by my Department includes information on the extent of such land in private ownership. I have no plans to extend the scope of the survey, nor to require private owners to notify me of the redevelopment potential of their land.

Development Corporations (Jobs and Houses)

20. Mr. Lester asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the number of new jobs created, and homes refurbished and built by (a) the London Docklands Development Corporation and (b) the Merseyside Development Corporation.

Mr. John Patten: Between 1981 and mid-1985 some 8,000 permanent jobs were attracted to LDDC's area. MDC has so far attracted a total of 1,156 jobs. In addition, there are currently about 1,500 construction jobs at any one time in London and 700 in Merseyside. Both UDCs also actively support existing firms and jobs.

Some 6,041 homes were built in London's docklands up to the end of 1986, with about 5,000 currently under construction; 221 flats have been refurbished in buildings previously owned by the LDDC. In MDC's area, 60 new homes have been built, with a further 60 currently under construction and many more are now planned.

Land Use

21. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of land currently designated for agricultural use he estimates will change to other uses besides forestry as a result of the proposals contained in the draft circular on alternative land use.

Mr. Waldegrave: In England and Wales in the period 1980-85 fewer than 5,000 hectares of farmland a year were transferred to urban uses, compared with 15,000-17,000 hectares a year in the period 1945-1975. I do not expect any significant change in the recent rate as a result of the adjustment of planning policy proposed in the draft circular.

Islington (Rate Support Grant)

22. Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the level of rate support grant payable to Islington borough; and what was the equivalent figure for 1979-80.

Mr. Chope: £51·049 million in 1986-87; £57·323 million at the settlement spending assumption in 1987-88. There is no equivalent figure for 1979-80.

London Marathon (County Hall)

23. Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what communications he has had with the London residuary body about the future use of county hall by the organisers of the London marathon.

Mr. Chope: I have nothing to add to my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Gentleman on 4 March.

Community Charge

24. Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what further representations he has received on his consultative documents on the community charge.

Mr. Chope: We have received about 20 representations in response to the document on the community charge.

37. Mr. Matthew Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of local authority income he estimates will be under central Government control under the proposed community charge scheme.

Mr. Chope: The assumption in the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) was that the relative shares of income from different sources would be unchanged in the move to the new local finance system. The Green Paper related to 1984-85 when total local authority income from all sources was some £39 billion. Of that total, all forms of Government grants and subsidies accounted for 35·6 per cent. Non-domestic rate income, which under the Green Paper proposals will be determined by statutory formula, accounted for a further 16·5 per cent. The actual balance between sources of income will depend on decisions to be taken by the Government at the time of implementation.

28. Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the proposed minimum proportion of rates or community charge to be paid by persons on low incomes.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 24 March to the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Dubs).

41. Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish an analysis of representations received on his proposals for a community charge, showing those organisations in favour and those against.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave today to the hon. Member for Leigh (Mr. Cunliffe).

45. Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish updated tables showing the import of the community charge for each local authority and a range of households.

Mr. Chope: I have today placed in the Library figures illustrating the possible effect of our community charge and non-domestic rate proposals on all local authorities. These are based on what authorities planned to spend in 1986-87, and make no allowances for authorities which might bring their spending under control, nor for changes in the total of central Government grant or GREs such as will occur in 1987-88. They also depend on assumptions about the way in which the new system will operate where a number of important decisions still remain to be taken.

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish tables in the Official Report showing in respect of each district and borough in England and Wales at what rateable value the estimated community charge will be equal to the domestic rate bill, for one, two and three-adult households, with and without safety nets;

(2) if he will estimate the size of the total safety net provision for England and Wales in the first year of operation of the community charge; how many local authorities will contribute to this provision; how many will receive from it; and which are the top 10 contributors and recipients;

(3) if he will publish in the Official Report tables relating to the impact of the community charge showing for each district and borough in England and Wales (a) the average domestic rate bills for 1986-87, and (b) his estimate of the community charge at a taxpayer level on a comparable 1986-87 basis, for one-adult, two-adult and three-adult households, with safety nets and without safety nets, showing in each case the difference between rate bills and community charges.

Dr. Boyson [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 420]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave today to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett). I have today written to the hon. Member.

"Paying for Local Government"

25. Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has had any further responses to the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government".

Mr. Chope: Since the consultation period ended on 31 October, we have received a number of responses to the Green Paper and to our subsequent announcements.

Basildon (New Towns Commission Tenants)

26. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the status of New Towns Commission tenants in Basildon.

Mr. John Patten: Tenants of the New Towns Commission in Basildon are secure tenants under the Housing Act 1985, with all the rights and protection which that brings.

Council House Sales

27. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the numbers of council houses (a) sold and (b) built in north east Cambridgeshire in each of the last five years.

Mr. Tracey: This information is not collected for individual constituencies.

Harrow (Rate Support Grant)

29. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the council of the London borough of Harrow about the rate support grant figures for 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has had no discussions with the council of the London Borough of Harrow about the rate support grant figures for 1986-87 and 1987-88, although there has been correspondence between the council and the Department.

Urban Regeneration Grant

30. Mr. Dorrell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to introduce the new urban regeneration grant.

Mr. John Patten: Next week.

Housing Associations

31. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what money has been made available in the current financial year to housing associations.

Mr. Tracey: Forecast gross investment is £798 million, as set out in the public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd 56, Vol. II. table 3.9.7).

Water Industry

32. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much his Department has spent during 1986-87 to the latest available date in relation to proposals to privatise the water industry.

Mr. John Patten: The latest forecast of expenditure in 1986-87 on work in preparation for the privatisation of the water authorities is as follows:

Staff	400,000
Advisers Fees	1,100,000
Office Services	25,000
Total	1,535,000

These figures do not include certain other costs, such as accommodation, which are borne centrally.

Urban Development Grants

33. Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is satisfied with the response to his invitation for bids for urban development grants.

Mr. John Patten: Yes, 57 local authorities in England are now invited to submit applications for urban development grant, including eight which were first invited in February this year.

Chemicals (Ozone Depletion)

34. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, in order of importance, the five chemical compounds which on current usage patterns within the United Kingdom has the greatest ozone-depleting potential.

Mr. Waldegrave: Depletion of the ozone layer is a global problem. It is generally accepted internationally that the five chemical compounds having the greatest ozone-depleting potential are CFC 12, CFC 11, CFC 113 and Halons 1211 and 1301, having regard to the relative efficiency of subtstances to destroy ozone and estimates of global production. Figures for the use of these chemicals in the United Kingdom are not available.

Bedfordshire County Council (Grant)

35. Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much grant Bedfordshire county council has lost for the year 1987-88 as a result of (a) increasing its expenditure for that year above the level his Department had assumed of 5·25 per cent. on current expenditure and (b) increasing its expenditure for that year above the rate of inflation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Bedfordshire county council's grant entitlement for 1987-88 amounts to £37·2 million at the level of expenditure we estimate it has budgeted for. This is £8·2 million less than it would have received if it spent at the settlement spending assumption—that is a 5·25 per cent. increase on current expenditure—and £9·9 million less than if it had increased expenditure in line with inflation. These entitlements and Bedforshire's budget include the estimated effects of the teachers' pay deal.

It is Bedfordshire county council's decision to increase expenditure by 12·0 per cent. including additional expenditure arising from the teachers' pay deal, which has resulted in the reduced grant entitlement. The resulting 21·3 per cent. increase in its precept is the highest of any shire county. If Bedfordshire had budgeted in line with the settlement spending assumption adjusted for teachers' pay, its precept increase would have been lower than the average shire county increase of 7·9 per cent.

Housing Estates (Conservation Villages)

36. Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to resist the contruction of large new housing estates in designated conservation villages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Policy on development control in conservation areas is set out in DOE Circular 8/87 published on 25 March. This repeats advice from an earlier circular (23/77) that in considering proposals for new development the emphasis will often be on control rather than prevention, to allow the area to remain alive and prosperous, but at the same time ensure that any new development accords with its architectural and visual qualities. Policy on the provision of sites for new housing in and around villages more generally is set out in DOE Circular 15/84.

Local Authority Housing Stock

38. Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will update the figure given in his Department's most recent report on the conditions of local authority housing stock for the sum required to bring conditions up to modern standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: Further information on the condition of the local authority housing stock will be provided by the 1986 English house condition survey.

Amusement Centres

39. Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received about the change of use of premises for amusement centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: My hon. Friend has received representations from hon. Members of this House and the general public expressing the view that the moral and social issues which so often lead to public opposition to amusement arcades should be considerations to be taken into account in planning decisions. However, the courts have decided that only considerations relating to land use and environmental issues are material. Such material considerations would include location, noise, disturbance and appearance. The impact of a proposed amusement centre on the character of a shopping area might also be material, but this would be judged on the basis of whether the implementation of the proposals would mean the overall number of non-retail outlets reaching an unacceptable level.

Black Country (Urban Development Corporation)

40. Mr. Stevens asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last visited the west midlands to discuss the proposed urban development corporation for the Black Country.

Mr. John Patten: I visited the west midands on 11 March and held discussions with leading members of Sandwell and Walsall metropolitan borough councils.

Both authorities are to be congratulated on their realism and foresight in accepting the benefits which the designation of an urban development corporation will bring to the Black Country. The constructive attitude of the local authorities means that additional resources will reach the area earlier. The chairman and deputy chairman designate of the proposed UDC are already working with vigour and enthusiasm to ensure that no time is lost in tackling the problems of the area.

Urban Development Corporations

42. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to accelerate progress in setting up urban development corporations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We are making rapid progress in setting up the four new UDCs announced last October. The Trafford Park development corporation came into existence on 10 February. Consultants have been studying the proposed areas for the Black Country, Tyne and Wear and Teesside UDCs. Chairmen designate have been announced and orders establishing these UDCs will be made shortly.

Bathing Water

43. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what communications he has received from the European Community regarding legal action in relation to the European Community directive on bathing waters.

Mr. Waldegrave: As I informed the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 26 June 1986, there have been requests for information in respect of a number of individual bathing waters which have been the subject of representations to the commission.

We have responded to these requests and provided the commission with the information sought.

46. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to give any advice to the British public regarding the use of bathing waters below the European Community standard.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government see no need to issue general guidance on this matter. Her Majesty's Government are advised that sewage contamination of bathing waters may create a health hazard only when conditions are so foul as to be aesthetically quite unacceptable. Such occurrences are extremely rare. It is for medical officers of environmental health or officers from local authority environmental health departments to advise on local conditions.

Leicester (Unoccupied Housing)

44. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the percentage of houses in the private sector in Leicester which are presently unoccupied.

Mr. Tracey: The latest figures the Department has are contained in Leicester's 1986 HIP submission, a copy of which is in the Library.

Rate Support Grant

47. Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish his next report on the rate support grant proposal.

Mr. Chope: The rate support grant report for 1987-88 and supplementary reports for two other years were laid before the House on Friday 20 March 1987. They were approved by the House on Wednesday 25 March 1987.

My right hon. Friend proposes to lay a supplementary report for 1987-88 shortly. This will deal primarily with revisions arising from the proposed teachers' pay settlement.

Local Planning Inquiries (Assistance to Objectors)

48. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to provide assistance to objectors in preparing their case for major local planning inquiries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: No. The Government's response (CM 43) to the Fifth Report from the Environment Committee set out in paragraphs 63 to 65 our reasons for concluding against any form of funding for objectors.

Nitrite Levels (EC Directive)

49. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what communications he has received from the European Community regarding legal action in relation to the European Community directive on nitrite levels.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Commission of the European Communities wrote on 13 February 1987 to inform me that it had decided to take action against the United Kingdom under article 169 of the treaty for non-compliance with the EC directive relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption, in respect of nitrite levels in the water supply serving Tower Hamlets. No reasons were given and no letter instituting such action has been received to date.

A request for a delay in complying with the directive standard for nitrite in Tower Hamlets was sent to the Commission in 1985, as permitted under article 20 of the directive. The delay was requested until September this year, by which time the supply is expected to comply with the directive. The Commission is now being informed of the substantial progress already made towards achieving this compliance.

Structure Plans

50. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is in a position to announce his proposals for the future of structure plans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government's proposals for the future of development plans were set out in a consultation paper issued last September. Comments on them are still being considered.

Greater London Council

51. Mrs. Roe asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will give an estimate of the overall saving so far and the average saving per household which has resulted from the abolition of the Greater London council.

Mr. Chope: My hon. Friend announced on 19 March, at columns 558-60, that the Government estimate that long-term annual savings of some £100 million per annum will result from staff savings following abolition. We expect that about half these savings will be as a direct result of abolition of the GLC.

In addition, the London residuary body estimates that some £129 million of GLC closing revenue balances and some £141·4 million capital receipts arising from its own disposals of capital assets and repayments of principal on loans is available for distribution by 31 March 1988. This cash is being distributed to all rating authorities in the area and amounts to about £100 per household.

Beaches (Pollution)

52. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress being made on the removal of pollution from the beaches of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye (Mr. Kennedy) on 27 March at column 276.

Unfit Dwellings

53. Mr. Stott asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest figure for the number of dwellings classed as unfit; and if he will give a breakdown for both public and private sectors.

Mr. Tracey: The Department's latest estimates appear in table 13 of the "English House Condition Survey 1981: Part 1", a copy of which is in the Library. Results of the 1986 survey are not yet available. The totals of numbers of unfit dwellings reported in local authorities' annual HIP returns have not been consistent with estimates from the house condition surveys.

Water Charges

54. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received regarding the increase in water charges to domestic users.

Mr. John Patten: Between October 1986 and mid-March 1987 my Department has received some 30 representations specifically concerning increases in water charges to domestic consumers.

London Docklands Redevelopment Corporation (Houses and Flats)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of houses and flats built on London Docklands Development Corporation owned land between July and December 1986, were sold to those on the housing waiting lists of Southwark, Tower Hamlets and Newham councils.

Mr. John Patten: Between the establishment of the corporation in July 1981 and 31 December 1986 45 per cent. of the sales of houses constructed on LDDC-owned sites were to residents of Southwark, Newham and Tower Hamlets. LDDC does not record what proportion of these purchasers were on the borough's housing waiting lists.

Defective Housing

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Official Report a list of the main prefabricated reinforced concrete house types covered by housing defects legislation, listing, in each case, the proportion of the estimated numbers of that type that has so far been repurchased by local authorities.

Mr. Tracey: The following PRC house types are designated under the housing defects legislation:

Airey
Boot
Cornish Unit
Dorran
Dyke
Gregory
Myton
Newland
Orlit
Parkinson Frame
Reema Hollow Panel
Schindler and Hawksley SGS
Stent
Stonecrete
Tarran
Underdown
Unity and Butterley
Waller
Wates
Wessex
Winget
Woolaway

We estimate that some 23,000 private owners of PRC properties are eligible for assistance and that by end December 1986, local authorities in England had repurchased some 4,300 designated properties (including the Smith house type). Comprehensive information on repurchases by property type is not currently available.

Grant-related Expenditure Assessments

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he now proposes to make any changes in the factors used to compile local authority grant-related expenditure assessement.

Mr. Chope: Grant-related expenditure assessments (GREAs) for 1987-88 were approved by the House on 25 March. We have begun consultation with the local authority associations and preliminary work on the 1988-89 GREAs.

Countryside (Access)

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much land in England falls within the definition of open country set out in section 59 of the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949 as amended by section 16 of the Countryside Act 1968; and, of that land (a) to how much the public has a legal right of access on foot, (b) to how much the public has in practice, but not as of right, access on foot and (c) to how much the public is denied access on foot.

Mr. Waldegrave: No central record is maintained of this information.

Flagstaffs

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the annual cost to public funds of erecting and lowering flagstaffs in Parliament square and elsewhere in the metropolis for state visits, anniversaries and other celebrations; and if he will make a statement about the tendering for this work.

Mr. Chope: The annual cost varies according to the number of state visits and other events. The cost for 1986-87 is expected to be £90,000. In 1985-86 it was approximately £150,000.

The work is carried out by contractors appointed for three years on the basis of competitive tendering.

Planning Control

Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will initiate discussions with representatives of local authorities' planning departments on changes in planning legislation to provide for applications for planning permission for the demolition of unlisted dwellings as well as for the erection of new dwellings.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has no evidence to suggest that there is a significant problem which would be remedied by such an extension of planning control.

Council Houses

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses were started in 1986; and what was the comparable figure in 1976.

Mr. Tracey: The number of dwellings started for local authorities in 1976 appears in table 6.1*(a)* of "Housing and Construction Statistics, 1975-1985" and the provisional figure for 1986 appears in table 2*(a)* of "Housing and Construction Statistics" No. 28. Copies of both publications are available in the Library.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of its work in terms of turnover the Property Services Agency contracts out.

Mr. Chope: Nearly 80.

Seal Skins

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures for the number of seal an sealion skins being imported into the United Kingdom and the EEC for 1986.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have been asked to reply.

The information is in the following table.

Imports of complete raw furskins 1986

	Numbers
	European Community[1]	United Kingdom
Pups of Harp and Hooded seals	1,603	—
Other seals and sealions	124,969	2,586

[1] Excluding Greece and Portugal.

Housing Finance

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the cost or receipts to public funds at the local and national level in the current financial year of (a) subsidies to local authority and new town housing net of rents receivable before any remission to tenants on account of housing benefit and other remissions, (b) receipts from the sale of local authority and new town housing, (c) mortgage interest tax relief on private housing and (d) housing and other benefits to tenants of local authority and private landlords, respectively.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 23 March 1987, c. 47]: Estimates (England only) for 1986-87 are:

	£ million
(a) Subsidies to local authority and new town housing	567
(b) Local authority and new town housing capital receipts	[1]2,000
(c) Mortgate interest tax relief	3,960
(d) Cost of housing benefit to tenants of local authority and private landlords, including rate rebates to owner occupiers	4,240

[1] Approximate.

Requests for more detailed information on housing benefit and other forms of income support to tenants of local authority and private landlords should be addressed to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services.

THE ARTS

Consumer Protection

Mr. Cash asked the Minister for the Arts what advice he has given to public library authorities on the possible effect on the discharge of their functions of clauses 10 and (46)(1)(a) of the Consumer Protection Bill [Lords].

Mr. Luce: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 2 April 1987

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General how many unemployed claimants aged under 25 years there were in each parliamentary constituency at the most recently available date.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am sending the hon. Member the information requested which is also available from the Library. The information relates to the numbers of unemployed claimants aged under 25 years in each parliamentary constituency of the United Kingdom on 8 January 1987, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by age is available.

Mr. Wallace asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the steps he takes to ensure the accuracy of his Department's unemployment figures as a true indication of the number out of work.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am satisfied that the monthly unemployment figures are an accurate measure of the number of people claiming benefits at unemployment benefit offices.

Industrial Language Training Service

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General when he expects his Department's considerations of the Manpower Services Commission's review of the industrial language training service to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: A decision has now been made that the industrial language training service will continue to be funded by the Manpower Services Commission for a further financial year under present arrangements. Further consideration will be given during the year to the range of problems the ILTS is seeking to tackle to offer further guidance on its future funding and management.

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General what are the reasons for the delay in responding to the recommendations on the future of the industrial language training service; what representations he has received from the Manpower Services Commission about its ability to determine the 1987-88 Budget provision in the absence of decisions on these recommendations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Decisions on the future of the industrial language training service have required very careful attention in the light of the important issues raised in the recent review. Officials in the MSC and my Department have worked closely in planning how best to allocate funds for 1987-88 while further consideration is given to the future management and funding of the service. The local authorities concerned have been told of the financial arrangements for next year.

YTS

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Paymaster General what percentage of people trained under YTS in 1986 completed their course with a nationally recognised qualification.

Mr. Trippier: The information is not available in the form requested. Of those respondents to the Manpower Services Commission's regular follow-up survey of leavers who completed a one-year YTS training programme in the period April to August 1986, 32 per cent. reported that they had gained a nationally recognised qualification whilst on YTS. Under two-year YTS, which began in April 1986, it is intended that all trainees should be given the chance to gain such a qualification.

City Task Forces

Mr. Freeson asked the Paymaster General if he will give details of the work of the interdepartmental task forces established in 1986 in eight small city areas.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The task forces were set up under the Government's inner cities initiative. The aim of the initiative is to improve the quality of life and bring jobs to the most deprived areas by improving the targeting of the Government's national programmes on to those areas and to experiment with new methods of extending those programmes using an £8 million a year top-up fund. The task forces comprise of a small number of civil servants and private sector secondees in offices in the districts they serve. They seek to establish good relations with the residents of the district and to involve those residents in plans for the revival of their areas.

So far I have approved 100 projects committing more than £4·9 million of these top-up resources in our task force areas. These will encourage enterprise training and job creation. We have also concentrated the efforts and programmes of the Manpower Services Commission and other Government Departments on the eight areas and their residents. We are establishing enterprise agencies and development funds to support local business in partnership with a clearing bank in each district. We are making progress on the greater use of local labour on inner city building work and on targeted training schemes which link training with specific job opportunities for local people. We are entering into projects in partnership with private sector companies such as Tarmac and McAlpine and we are involving existing organisations with experience in the field or strong local connections such as Business in the Community, Project Fullemploy, Action Resource Centre, Evangelical Alliance, NACRO, the Industrial Society, the Apex Trust and others in pursuing the aims of the initiative.

Mr. Freeson asked the Paymaster General if he will give details of the work of the city action teams in (a) Hackney, (b) Islington and Lambeth, (c) Newcastle-Gateshead, (d) Liverpool, (e) Manchester-Salford and (f) Birmingham since their establishment.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Five city action teams were set up in April 1985. They are located in: London (which includes Hackney, Islington and Lambeth); Newcastle-Gateshead; Liverpool; Manchester-Salford and Birmingham.

The city action teams have been successful in meeting their objectives of better co-ordinating Government action and help in the priority areas they cover. They aim to reduce the number of people in acute housing stress, reduce the number of derelict sites and void buildings and increase job opportunities and the employability of certain groups. Total Government provision for expenditure in the city action teams priority areas was estimated to amount to about £670 million in 1985-86, and about £739 million in 1986-87. The Government have provided an additional £1 million to the Newcastle-Gateshead city action team during 1986-87 to provide pump-priming finance as part of their response to the recent shibuilding closures in the north-east.

Departmental Section UB 9

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will publish the responsibilities of his Department section UB 9.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 26 March 1987, c. 241]: I take it that the hon. Member is referring to UBS 9, which is one of the sections within my Department's unemployment benefit service head office.

The section is responsible for liaison arrangements between the Manpower Services Commission and unemployment benefit service and the related benefit office procedures.

Benefits

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will publish the preliminary results of his study into the reallocation of responsibility for benefits for the unemployed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 26 March 1987, c. 241]: No. The preliminary report of the joint study team on the relationships between DHSS and the Department of Employment and their networks of local offices was produced as advice for Ministers.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he is investigating the feasibility of imposing any new work test or conditions for the payment of unemployment benefit.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 26 March 1987, c. 241]: the policy and practice in these and many other matters is kept under review.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General how many staff are employed in (a) unemployment benefit offices, (b) jobcentres, (c) Manpower Services Commission and (d) the remainder of his Department; and how many separate buildings are occupied for each.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 356]: The information requested as on 9 March 1987 (the latest date for which figures are available) is as follows:

	Number of staff (including casual appointments)	Number of buildings
Unemployment benefit service (including unemployment benefit offices and regional offices)	29,200	[2]1,100
Employment and enterprise group[5] (including jobcentres, regional and area offices)	15,471	[3]1,009
The Manpower Services Commission (including the employment and enterprise group, vocational and educational training group, skill training agency and MSC head office)	[1]27,305	1,285
Remainder of Department of Employment (group)	8,781	[4]175

[1] This figure includes the number of staff given at [5].
[2] Unemployment benefit offices.
[3] Jobcentres.
[4] Including outstations.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Corporation Tax

Mr. McCrindle asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effects of his proposals relating to corporation tax on the capital gains of companies on life assurance companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring up to date for 1987-88 the information in the reply dated 25 July 1986, Official Report, column 698, concerning reduced rate contributions together with the estimated cost to the Exchequer; and if he will publish his subsequent letter in the Official Report.

Mr. Major [pursuant to the reply, 25 March 1987, c. 214-15]: I have been asked to reply.

It is expected that during 1987-88 an average of 1·6 million women in the United Kingdom will be eligible to pay class 1 national insurance contributions at the reduced rate for married women and widows. This estimate includes those optants who are expected to earn less than the class 1 lower earnings limit, and who are not expected to pay any contributions.

It is estimated that in 1987-88 the full year cost of the reduced contribution rate, in terms of lower contributions revenue, will be £200 million. It is not possible to estimate reliably the associated saving in benefit expenditure.

The remaining information is as follows:

Class 1 primary contribution rates 1987-88

	Not contracted-out		Contracted-out
			Standard rate
	Standard Rate	Reduced Rate[1]	On first £39.00	On earnings over £39.00	Reduced Rate[1]

A copy of my hon. Friend's letter to the hon. Member has been placed in the Library.

THE ARTS

Consumer Protection

Mr. Cash asked the Minister for the Arts what advice he has given to public library authorities on the possible effect on the discharge of their functions of clauses 10 and 46(1)(a) of the Consumer Protection Bill.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his reply, 1 April 1987]: None. Clause 10 of the Bill creates the offence of supplying consumer goods, including books, which fail to comply with the general safety requirement. It does not relate to risks of death or personal injury which might arise by virtue of a person's relying on or being influenced by what is printed in a book. The definition of "safe" in clause 19 makes that clear. A public library authority will be liable only if it supplies (a term defined in clause 46) consumer goods which are not reasonably safe having regard to all circumstances.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

BBC External Services

55. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met representatives of the external services of the British Broadcasting Corporation; and what was discussed.

56. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his last meeting with representatives of the external services of the BBC.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend last met representatives of the BBC external services when he visited Bush House on 20 March. During his visit my right hon. and learned Friend discussed a range of external broadcasting issues with the top management of the external services. He also took the opportunity to underline the importance of the fundamental principle of accountability for public funds as well as our view that it is right that the National Audit Office should have access to the BBC external services to carry out economy, efficiency and effectiveness examinations.

Passports

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards foreign Governments who are proven to have forged British passports for use by their agents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We take the greatest exception to such actions by foreign Governments and make this clear, as well as seeking firm assurances against any recurrence of such unacceptable behaviour.

South Africa (Military Attachés)

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to cease to accredit South African military attachés to the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Chalker: As my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs told the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 5 June 1986, at column 626, we have already agreed with our European partners not to grant accreditation to military attachés from South Africa.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Nicaragua

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the level of British Government aid to Nicaragua in 1986.

Mr. Chris Patten: In 1986 British bilateral aid to Nicaragua consisted of:

a. Support for small development projects co-financed with British voluntary agencies under the joint funding scheme. Eleven projects were approved in the financial year 1985-86 to a value of some £100,000.

b. £82,500 in response to an appeal by Christian Aid to help displaced persons in Nicaragua.

c. £3,200 in technical co-operation for training in Britain.

Nicaragua also benefited from European Community aid to the region, to which Britain makes a substantial contribution.

Lebanon

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken by the European Community to assist the Palestinians with food and medical supplies in the refugee camps in the Lebanon.

Mr. Chris Patten: The European Community contributes annually (about £22 million in 1986) to the feeding programmes of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency, which mainly benefit Palestinians in Lebanon. In addition, 2·7 million ecu (about £2 million) from the EC budget was allocated on 5 March 1987 to UNRWA, the UN Disaster Relief Organisation and the International Committee of the Red Cross towards their efforts to relieve conditions in the camps. Member states of the Community are also making their own contributions.

SCOTLAND

Housing (Capital Expenditure)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the current and capital expenditure per head on housing in Scotland during the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Rifkind: Current expenditure on the housing revenue accounts of local authorities, new towns and the SSHA was £169·40 per head of overall population in 1985-86. Information on the current expenditure of housing associations is not available. Gross capital expenditure by all public housing bodies in 1985-86 was £115·62 per head.

Primary Schools

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many primary schools with fewer than three teachers there are in each of Scotland's regions and island areas; and if he will give a breakdown of the figures to show the number in each district.

Mr. John MacKay: The numbers of education authority primary schools in each region and island area in which less than three full-time equivalent teachers were employed in 1984 were as follows. Education statistics are not collated at district level.

	Numbers
Borders	36
Central	22
Dumfries and Galloway	47
Fife	23
Grampian	82
Highland	113
Lothian	18
Strathclyde	96
Tayside	61
Orkney	10
Shetland	19
Western Isles	36

Council House Sales

Sir Alexander Fletcher asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to seek to improve the average time taken to process council house sales by (a) the Edinburgh district council and (b) other local authorities in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: Across Scotland as a whole there is evidence that authorities are becoming increasingly aware of the financial advantages to be gained by the efficient processing of council house sales. The average time taken by councils during the fourth quarter of 1986 was 7·5 months — close to the target figure of seven months which we consider reasonable.

I am concerned, however, at the length of time which some local authorities are taking to process sales. Because receipts from council house sales form part of an authority's annual gross capital allocation for housing, processing delays—which result in the authority failing to generate the receipts level anticipated during the year in question — cause real reductions in the authority's effective consent, and hence in its housing programme.

I have therefore instructed my Department to write today to four authorities — Edinburgh, Monklands, Dumbarton and Argyll and Bute district councils—each of which is taking longer than 11 months on average to process sales, drawing their attention to the serious consequences of these delays. I calculate, for example, that because of delays in processing sales Edinburgh district council has forgone almost £10 million of capital expenditure consents since 1983, equivalent to approximately 10 per cent. of its gross housing capital allocation over the period. The letter asks for an early indication of the steps the four authorities propose to take to ensure that sales are completed within a reasonable period.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

British Telecom

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Attorney-General how many cases of multiple applications for British Telecom shares have been or are being investigated; if he will list cases in which successful prosecutions have been mounted; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Twelve cases of multiple applications for British Telecom shares were investigated by the police and considered by the Director of Public Prosecutions. Criminal proceedings for attempting to obtain British Telecom shares by deception, were instituted in seven cases against a total of 10 defendants. These cases were tried at Bow street magistrates court between 11 March and 29 September 1986. All 10 defendants (Roy Corbin, Warwick Goodman, Edward Hems, Paul Fogg, Dennis Williamson, Brian West, Brian Taub, Roy Conway, Stephen Conway and Michael Collins) were convicted.

DEFENCE

Rainfall (Gwynedd)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish detailed local figures of the amount of rainfall in Gwynedd on Friday 2 May 1986; and if he will make a statement on the degree of statistical accuracy of such meteorological information.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Rainfall measurements at some 40 observation points in Gwynedd between 0900 2 May and 0900 3 May 1986 ranged from 0 to 6·3 mm, the smaller amounts being mainly in the coastal areas and the larger ones in Anglesea and Snowdonia. Because of the showery nature of the rainfall, it is possible that even heavier falls occurred in localities not adequately covered by rain gauges.

Bullying and Brutality

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the procedures which establish to whom young recruits should initially refer complaints of bullying or brutality in the Army.

Mr. Freeman: A soldier may make a complaint about bullying, or any matter in which he thinks he has been wronged, either to his immediate superiors, such as his platoon or company commander, or direct to his commanding officer, who is required by law to investigate the complaint and take action as he considers necessary. Periodically soldiers are also given the opportunity to bring a complaint to the attention of a senior visiting officer. All soldiers are made aware of these procedures at an early stage in their training.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information is provided for recruits about procedures for making complaints about mistreatment.

Mr. Freeman: Mistreatment is not tolerated in the armed forces. Information on the services' redress of grievance procedures is brought to the attention of all personnel, including recruits, through posters and notices displayed prominently in all units and through standing publications.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make available in the Library the results of each investigation in the last four years into allegations of cruelty and brutality in the armed forces.

Mr. Freeman: It is not normal practice to publish investigation reports and, while their results are made available on request to those with a direct interest, it would not be appropriate to place such results in the Library.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of assessing the number of complaints made in each case of the last four years about cruelty and brutality in the armed forces.

Mr. Freeman: As I stated in answer to the right hon. Member's question on 23 March, at column 2, the information is not held centrally. It would be necessary to make inquiries at every service unit to see whether any such complaints had been made over the past four years. The cost of such an investigation would clearly be substantial.

Recruits (Training Costs)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average cost of (a) the first six months and (b) the first 12 months of training of recruits.

Mr. Freeman: Records are not held in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost and effort.

Deserters

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel have deserted in each of the last four years; and in which branch of the armed forces they served.

Mr. Freeman: Statistics for desertion and absence without leave are not easily distinguished, as the difference cannot normally be established until return. The following table therefore gives figures for both desertion and absence without leave from the armed forces (in practice the majority of cases fall into the latter category and arise from short-term domestic or personal problems affecting the individual).

Numbers deserting or going absent without leave: 1983 to 1986

	Royal Navy and Royal Marines	Army	Royal Air Force
1983	149	670	19
1984	110	662	16
1985	117	548	9
1986	100	522	12

Note: The figures show those deserting or being declared absent without leave in each year. The latter occurs after a maximum of seven days absence for the Royal Navy and the Royal Marines and after 21 days absence for the Army and Royal Air Force.

Foxhunter Radar

Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the discussions being held between his Department and the General Electric Company on the renegotiation of the supply contract for the Foxhunter radar system.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for South Ribble (Mr. Atkins) on 1 April.

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects Foxhunter radar to be fully operational in Tornado F2/3 squadrons of the Royal Air Force; what delays have occurred in this contract; and what financial penalties will be incurred by the manufacturer.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [pursuant to his reply, 16 March 1987, c. 376]: A contract for development of the Foxhunter radar for the Tornado air defence aircraft was placed with GEC Avionics in 1976 on a cost-plus basis. At that time the development phase was due to be completed by 1981. Subsequently a fixed price production programme for an interim standard of the radar was agreed with GEC Avionics. Deliveries of the interim radar have been made since early 1986. The total Ministry of Defence requirement is for 200 radars including parts. (A further 32 radars have been ordered to meet the requirements of Saudi Arabia.)

The Foxhunter radar was the first airborne pulse doppler radar to be developed in the United Kingdom, and inevitably some technical obstacles were encountered during the course of development. The radar does not meet all the requirements of the Royal Air Force, but radars to an agreed interim standard have already been delivered.

My Department is at present negotiating new contract arrangements for the programme, to implement a set of agreed modifications to achieve the required performance. Discussions have been held with the company on management aspects and the payment and reporting conditions that my Department will require as part of the contract conditions. My Department and GEC Avionics are currently negotiating towards a firm price for this work, with the aim of placing a new contract with GEC Avionics by the autumn of this year.

PRIME MINISTER

EC Expenditure

Q102. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will invite the next meeting of the European Council to review the functions and powers of the Court of Auditors in relation to expenditure by the EEC which the court determines to be illegal; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No.

British Telecom

Mrs. Ann Clwyd asked the Prime Minister what advice was issued to Ministers, prior to privatisation of British Telecom, about participation by Ministers in the purchase of shares in British Telecom.

The Prime Minister: Those Ministers most closely involved in the flotation of British Telecom were told that it would be ill-advised to apply for BT shares at the time of flotation. Other Ministers were advised that there was no general bar on applying for shares, subject to the normal requirement that there should be no conflict of interest.

Ministers were also advised that subsequent purchases of BT shares came under the general guidance given to Ministers on taking office.

Privatisation (Share Purchases)

Mrs. Ann Clwyd asked the Prime Minister if the advice to Ministers about the conduct of their financial affairs has been revised to take account of the opportunities for purchasing shares in privatised companies.

The Prime Minister: There has been no change to the general guidelines to Ministers on the conduct of their financial affairs. It has been the usual practice to issue specific advice to Ministers about the purchase of shares in privatised companies, which were formerly in public ownership, at the time of flotation.

Engagements

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 April.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 April.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 April.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 April.

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 April.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

ENERGY

North Sea Oil (Personnel)

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the most recent figures available to him of the numbers of personnel working offshore on the United Kingdom continental shelf; how many are (a) United Kingdom nationals, (b) European Economic Community nationals other than United Kingdom, (c) United States nationals and (d) others; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The numbers requested are as follows:

	Personnel offshore on 30 September 1986
	Totals	of which, on fixed installations
United Kingdom citizens	10,742	6,119
European Community nationals (excluding United Kingdom citizens)	436	153
United States nationals	90	24
Others	458	88
	11,726	6,384

These figures have been extracted from the Inland Revenue's 1986 survey of the offshore work force, which covers construction workers and personnel on fixed installations, mobile drilling rigs, service vessels and support barges. The only non-EC countries with more than 40 nationals on the UKCS at the time of the survey were Norway (230 personnel, three on fixed installations), the USA (90 personnel, 24 on fixed installations) and Sweden (79 personnel, two on fixed installations). The figures given are of personnel counted; in reporting its survey the Inland Revenue's practice is to multiply the total counted by 1.9 to allow for shift working and seasonal variations.

The entry and stay of non-EC nationals in the United Kingdom is controlled by the Home Office under the Immigration Act 1971. The Act does not extend offshore.

TRANSPORT

Third Party Insurance

57. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to make compulsory the display in a motor vehicle of a certificate that the vehicle has third party insurance cover.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. Such display would not give conclusive evidence of insurance and in some circumstances could be positively misleading.

Roads

Mr. Mudd asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all the motorway and trunk road contracts with a works cost of £1 million or more which his Department intends to award for 1987-88 showing, in each case, the total value of the contract and the expenditure likely to be incurred in that year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is as follows. The national road construction contracts actually let in 1987-88 will differ from this list, depending on the progress on outstanding statutory and other procedures. Other schemes not listed may start in 1987-88 if progress with their procedures is faster than currently expected.

Drivers (Visual Impairment)

Mr. Mudd asked the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department is monitoring any overseas studies into the use of delineation to counteract visual impairment in the case of drivers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am not aware of overseas studies of this kind. The topic is not in the current research programme.

Freightliner Terminal (Edinburgh)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report the stages in consultation and the bodies contacted prior to the close of the Freightliner terminal in Edinburgh.

Mr. David Mitchell: Freightliners Ltd. took its decision to rationalise its business on commercial grounds. It informed Ministers of its decision before it was announced on 9 January. It has since consulted those most closely affected — customers, staff and unions — on the implications of its decision.

Cross-Channel Ferries

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to introduce legislation requiring cross-Channel ferry operators to install black box recorders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: These recorders can be valuable in the investigation of certain casualties, but they are still being developed: technical standards and specifications need to be agreed and production costs established. It is premature at this time to consider whether the device should be installed on board ship on a statutory basis.

Aircraft Safety

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to meet the Civil Aviation Authority and the Manchester fire authority regarding their views on the number of aircraft seats which should be removed following the inquest recommendations on the accident at Manchester airport in August 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. Air safety matters are the statutory responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority.

Underground Passengers (Police Film)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to why passengers alighting at Fulham Broadway Underground station on Saturday afternoon 21 March were filmed by the police, as to what use has been made of the films, and as to whether the films are available to those filmed for viewing.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. The British Transport police's open use of hand-held camera equipment at Underground stations is an important and integral part of the measures agreed between the Government, the police and the football authorities to combat hooliganism associated with football. The procedure is complementary to the use of closed circuit television operated by police forces at all first and second division League football grounds; the aim being to deter troublemakers and assist the police in their public order and public safety duties.

I understand that BTP's camera was in use on 21 March because of the high proportion of supporters using the Underground to attend the West Ham versus Chelsea fixture. No trouble amongst the supporters occurred and the film was wiped clean.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Radio Spectrum

Sir John Page asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish the report from CSP International on the feasibility of introducing market forces into the management of radio spectrum.

Mr. Pattie: I have now received the final report by CSP International entitled "Deregulation of the Radio Spectrum in the UK." This complex study has taken nearly two years to complete and deals with all types of civil use of the radio spectrum. A steering group, including officials of my Department, has overseen development of the work, but the views expressed in the report are those of an independent firm of consultants. The Department is still appraising its full implications for radio users and spectrum management policy. The study does not therefore necessarily anticipate the future attitude of the Department on policies for spectrum management.

None the less, the findings of the study will be of interest to a wide range of existing and potential users of spectrum, service providers and manufacturers of equipment. The report is being published today by Her Majesty's Stationery Office and my Department would welcome views and comments on the analysis and proposals in the report, particularly the scope for deregulation and frequency planning organisations.

Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

Central Transport Users' Consultative Committee

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will now appoint Mr. James Towler of Leeds to the Central Transport Users' Consultative Committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 30 March, at column 360.

Science and Technology Grants

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will specify the number of claims made to his Department during 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85 by companies based in Wales for science and technology grants; and if he will identify how many of the claims had projected costs below £100,000.

Mr. Butcher: The total number of applications from companies based in Wales, for project support under the principal schemes of the Science and Technology Act, are as follows. Applications with eligible project costs below £100,000 are listed separately.

Number of applications

	Total	With project costs below £100,000
1979-80	16	9
1980-81	16	8
1981-82	30	10
1982-83	47	17
1983-84	89	50
1984-85	43	18

Hereford Bye Street Gate Sculptures

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if an export licence has been granted at any time in respect of the Hereford Bye Street Gate sculptures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Bye Street Gate sculptures are understood to have been in this country since at least 1965. The Department's records of export licences are retained for no more than 10 years.

Company Directors

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many company directors have been prosecuted and disqualified as a result of the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply, 31 March 1987, c. 444]: This Act, which consolidated the disqualification provisions of the Insolvency Act 1985 and the Companies Act 1985, came into effect on 29 December 1986. At that date, there were 453 disqualification orders on the register, subsequently, a further 22 orders have been notified.

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the United Kingdom share of European Economic Community exports of goods in Standard Industrial Trade Classifications 5, 6, 7, and 8, respectively, in 1979, 1985 and the latest period of 12 months for which figures are available; and what information he has as to how these compare with the share held by Germany, France and Italy.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 1 April 1987]: The information is in the following table:

Shares of European Community[1] exports (per cent.)

	Standard International Trade Classification Sections
	5	6	7	8

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bee Husbandry Committee

Mr. Livesey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will consider reviving the bee husbandry committee of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Our regular contacts with the representative beekeeping organisations keep us in touch with current problems and I see no reason to revive this committee.

Milk Processing

Sir Richard Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce legislation to prevent dairies or dairy farmers from adding a substance to milk to nullify the effect of antibiotics to enable it to be processed into cheese.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 1st April 1987]: It is already an offence under section 2 of the Food Act 1984 to sell to the purchaser's prejudice any food which is not of the nature substance or quality demanded by the purchaser. In addition, a dairy which used a substance as described by my hon. Friend in the manufacture of cheese would contravene the more specific provisions of the Cheese Regulations 1970, as amended.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Chess

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to promote the playing of chess in schools.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Government have no specific plans to promote the playing of chess in schools as this is a matter for schools themselves. However, the Department provides a regular grant towards the administrative costs of the British Chess Federation which aims to encourage the study and practice of chess, and we would wish to see as many young people as possible being given the opportunity to play.

General Certificate of General Education

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received any recent representations from education authorities about funding of the general certificate secondary education examinations.

Mrs. Rumbold: No.

Primary School Places

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will publish a table showing for each local education authority in Greater London that replied to both of his Department's circular letters dated 5 February 1982 and 30 June 1986 requesting information on sub-standard primary school places (a) the capital allocations made for each year 1982-83 to 1985-86 inclusive, in cash terms, and (b) the capital expenditure bids submitted for each year 1982-83 to 1985-86 inclusive, in cash terms; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish a table showing for each metropolitan district education authority outside Greater London that replied to both of his Department's circular letters dated 5 February 1982 and 30 June 1986 requesting information on sub-standard primary school places (a) the capital allocations made for each year 1982-83 to 1985-86 inclusive, in cash terms, and (b) the capital expenditure bids submitted for each year 1982-83 to 1985-36 inclusive, in cash terms; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will publish a table showing for each non-metropolitan county education authority that replied to both of his Department's circular letters dated 5 February 1982 and 30 June 1986 requesting information on sub-standard primary school places (a) the capital allocations made for each year 1982-83 to 1985-86 inclusive, in cash terms, and (b) the capital expenditure bids submitted for each year 1982-83 to 1985-86 inclusive, in cash terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his replies, 12 March 1987, c. 262]: Funding for local education authority capital expenditure is not provided by the Department, but is the responsibility of the LEAs. The level of capital spending they may undertake in any year is, however, limited to the allocation notified to them by the Department, plus the flexibilities permitted by the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980. Capital allocations are calculated by applying a standard set of criteria to the information supplied by all LEAs on a common basis. The information requested for the years 1982-83 to 1985-86 broken down between authorities within Greater London, metropolitan districts and non-metropolitan authorities is set out in the table.

Teachers (Special Qualifications)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is available to his Department on the numbers of teachers in each local education authority with special qualifications relevant to the teaching of pupils with statements under the Education Act 1981, other than teachers employed full-time in special schools; if he will publish what information is available for the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, of 23 March 1987, c. 32]: Individual teachers' records held by this Department for pension purposes include information on some special qualifications for teaching children with handicaps. Not all of the qualifications covered carry a salary benefit so there may be some under-recording. The latest available information is for 31 March 1985 and is given for each local education authority in England.

Higher Education Colleges

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list alphabetically all the colleges in England providing higher education work with 50 per cent. or more of students on advanced courses indicating in which local education authority, British and European parliamentary constituencies they fall.

Mr. Walden [pursuant to his reply, 31 March 1987, c. 448]: The relevant institutions are listed alphabetically, together with the percentage of advanced work (based on total home and EC student full-time equivalent numbers) and, where appropriate, their local education authority. Information on the British and European parliamentary constituencies in which they fall is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Officers—Prisoners Ratio

15. Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the ratio of prison officers to prisoners for (a) 1978 and (b) 1986.

Mr. Mellor: The officer to inmate ratio for 1978 was 1:2·68 and for 1986 was 1:2·47.

Police Interviews (Tape Recording)

17. Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police forces in England and Wales are introducing the tape recording of police interviews with suspects.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The intention is that tape-recording interviews with suspects in police stations, except for the most minor offence, should become standard practice for all police forces in England and Wales by 1991. To date, 34 out of the 43 police forces in England and Wales have been given grant-aid to prepare and equip interview rooms for tape recording.

32. Mr. Andy Stewart asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has made any assessment of the effectiveness of tape recording of police questioning of suspects; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Tape recording of police interviews with suspects has been the subject of field trials which have been monitored by the Home Office research and planning unit under the direction of a national steering committee, including representatives of the judiciary and the legal profession as well as the Home Office and the police. The unit will publish a second report on the trials shortly. In the meantime, I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave earlier today in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Stirling (Mr. Forsyth).

47. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the most recent progress of trials for the tape recordings of police interviews with suspects.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The two-year field trials, which were held in five police force areas to test equipment and procedures, ended last year. The trials were monitored and evaluated by the Home Office research and planning unit. A further report about this will be published shortly. In the meantime, we have already announced that the intention is that tape recording of interviews with suspects in police stations should become standard police practice by 1991.

Crime Statistics

18. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what percentage (a) crime overall and (b) crimes of violence have increased in Leicester since June 1979.

Mr. Mellor: We have of course no figures for crime committed overall. Between 1979 and 1986 the number of notifiable offences recorded by the police in Leicestershire increased by an average of 7·1 per cent. a year and offences of violence against the person by 6 per cent. a year.

Neighbourhood Watch Schemes

19. Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes are in operation; and what measures his Department uses to monitor their effectiveness.

53. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes are now in operation; and what further increase in their numbers he expects.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are over 28,500 schemes in existence in England and Wales, more than three times as many as this time last year, and police reports suggest that numbers will continue to rise in the foreseeable future.

Steps are being taken to monitor the progress of a number of schemes and preliminary indications suggest that, where they are carefully designed and introduced, crime is reduced. The Home Office has commissioned research on the effectiveness of neighbourhood watch in the Metropolitan police district, the results of which are expected later in the year. Further research has also been commissioned. The results of this work will provide useful lessons in developing neighbourhood watch.

Home Beat Police Officers (London)

20. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many policemen in London are now home beat officers compared with five years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that there are now 1,256 home beat officers in the Metropolitan police district. Information about the position five years ago is not available.

Robbery

21. Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the increase in robbery *(a)*between 1974 and 1979 and (b) from 1979 to 1986.

Mr. Mellor: The number of offences of robbery recorded by the police in England and Wales increased by an average of 7·6 per cent. a year between 1974 and 1979. In the last five years the average increase was 8·1 per cent.

Wandsworth Prison (Report)

22. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends to take in the light of the annual report of the board of visitors of Wandsworth prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: My noble Friend is giving careful consideration to the 1986 report of the Wandsworth prison board of visitors and will be writing to the chairman of the board in due course.

Defendants (Statistics)

23. Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of defendants currently waiting to stand trial in England and Wales have been detained for a period in excess of 110 days.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not available centrally but it is estimated that on 31 January 1987 about 27 per cent. of the untried population in prison department establishments in England and Wales were initially remanded into custody more than 110 days earlier. This period includes any time spent on bail after the original remand in custody.

Under-Age Drinkers

24. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the initiatives that are being taken to combat alcohol abuse by under-age drinkers.

Mr. Mellor: A working group of the Home Office standing conference on crime prevention is reviewing the problem of under-age drinking and will publish a report and recommendations in November. The Home Office crime prevention unit is helping local agencies to establish a demonstration project in Coventry, which will develop local strategies to tackle alcohol-related crime including under-age drinking. These initiatives are complementary to the health education work being undertaken by the Department of Health and Social Security, and the Department of Education and Science.

AIDS (Prisoners)

25. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to his answer of 5 March, Official Report, column 685, he will make it his policy to carry out tests on a representative cross-section of prisoners to assess the proportion of the prison population who are HIV positive.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Police-Public Co-operation

26. Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will take further steps to involve the public in a partnership with the police in the fight against crime.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are developing a new national crime prevention campaign which will show some of the ways in which the community can contribute to the prevention of crime. The Home Office has set aside £3·4 million for this campaign during 1987-88 with provision to sustain the campaign over the next two years. With the campaign we shall be publishing a handbook describing a wide range of crime prevention projects in which all sections of the community can participate.

36. Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans for an initiative to improve the present relationship between public and police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We believe that relations between the police and most members of the public are already good; but neither the Home Office nor the police are in any way complacent about this. Good relations between police and public are highly desirable in their own right, and they are also an essential element in an effective crime prevention strategy. We shall therefore continue to encourage the development of police-community consultations about local policing issues, more involvement by the police with young people in schools or in leisure activities, crime prevention initiatives such as neighbourhood watch, the increased use of foot patrols and other methods of policing which increase the level of contact between police and public.

Inner City Areas

27. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies his Department is conducting into the effects of deprivation in inner city areas.

Mr. Mellor: The Home Office research and planning unit carries out a substantial programme of research on the effects of crime in deprived areas. The British crime survey (of which there will be a further sweep later this year) provides the broader picture. Detailed studies include work on racial attacks, on crime prevention in urban areas, on the effects of housing on crime and the problems of inner-city housing estates. The 1986-87 programme of the research and planning unit is in the House of Commons Library and the 1987-88 programme will be published in June this year.

Crime Prevention

28. Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to seek to deal with the increase in rape, robbery, theft and burglary.

Mr. Mellor: Different measures will be needed to deal with different types of offences. The Government's broad strategy and some of the specific measures were are taking are set out in "Criminal Justice: A Working Paper", which was published in November.

35. Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what expenditure is planned by his Department for the year 1987-88 on crime prevention work.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In addition to expenditure on the police, we plan expenditure of some £6·1 million in 1987-88 on crime prevention publicity, the crime prevention centre and supporting five local demonstration projects.

Bail Hostels

29. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on bail hostels.

Mr. Mellor: There are 102 approved bail hostels, probation hostels and combined probation and bail hostels in England and Wales, all of which can accommodate persons who have been released on bail on condition that they reside there. They also take persons who are the subject of a probation order requiring them to live in a particular hostel and, for short periods, persons who are receiving statutory after-care following their release from prison. They are subject to the Approved Probation Hostel and Home, and Bail Hostel Rules 1976, augmented by Home Office circulars, and the Department meets 80 per cent. of their cost. The responsibility for the day-to-day management of most of these hostels is a matter for the area probation service, but 24 are managed by voluntary committees. It is our policy that area probation services should enable the courts to make maximum use of these hostels for the reception of persons on bail as well as for the accommodation of offenders. Provision is made in public expenditure plans for sufficient hostel places and the position is kept under regular review.

Police Officers (London Street Duty)

30. Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to whether there has been any increase in the time spent by police officers on street duty in London since 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that uniformed police constables attached to divisions performed approximately 5,900 man years of street duty in 1986. Comparable information for 1979 is not available.

Crimes (Clear-up Rate)

31. Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when was the last occasion on which the number of crimes cleared up fell.

Mr. Mellor: Since 1970 the number of offences cleared up by the police has risen in most years, but there were falls in 1973, 1976, 1978, 1979 and 1986. Numbers of offences cleared up in the previous 10 years are published in the annual Command Paper "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (table 2.17 of the issue for 1985).

48. Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the clear-up rate of crime in 1978 and 1986 for Cleveland county.

Mr. Mellor: In Cleveland the ratio of notifiable offences cleared up to offences recorded by the police was 55 per cent. in 1978 and 34 per cent. in 1986.

49. Mr. Robert C. Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when was the last time that the clear-up rate of crime was less than one third.

Mr. Mellor: The clear-up rate for notifiable offences recorded by the police has been published in the Command Paper "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" each year from 1950 onwards (table 2.17 of the issue for 1985). Before 1986 the clear-up rate was never less than one third.

Newham

33. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the level of reported crime in Newham in the light of the Newham crime survey carried out by the Harris Research Centre a copy of which has been forwarded to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the total number of recorded crimes in Newham fell by 2·4 per cent. in 1986 compared with 1985, the number of arrests increased by 2·7 per cent., and the total number of crimes cleared up increased by 47·9 per cent. The Commissioner has not received a copy of the report of the Newham crime survey, which, I understand, is still unpublished.

Autocrime

34. Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further steps he will take to reduce autocrime; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The working group set up by the Home Office standing conference on crime prevention to consider car security is now following up the recommendations made in its report published last November. The group recognised that the prevention of autocrime is most amenable to initiatives by vehicle manufacturers and security measures by the motorist.

The most significant initiative with which the group has been associated is the production of a British standard on vehicle security, the first part of which was launched towards the end of last year. This seeks to define, for the first time, standards for the performance and use of equipment intended to prevent or deter unauthorised entry into or removal of a motor vehicle. The first part of the standard deals with mechanical locking systems, and further parts will deal with glazing and the protection of in-car entertainment equipment. We are seeking to have the British standard adopted as the basis of a European directive.

As most autocrime offences are committed by casual criminals preying on unprotected and vulnerable cars, we are continuing our efforts to persuade the motorist to be more security conscious. For example, autocrime features again in this year's "Magpies" campaign and the DVLC is resuming the distribution of car security advice leaflets with licence reminders.

We shall continue to urge motor manufacturers to improve the advice on car security which they give to car owners.

New Courthouse (Basildon)

37. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement regarding the building of a new courthouse in Basildon.

Mr. Mellor: The provision of the new magistrates' courthouse is essentially the responsibility of Essex county council, in consultation with the magistrates' courts committee. We have recently set a cost limit for the scheme which will allow Essex county council to proceed to tender stage without further reference to the Home Office.

Firearms

38. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the percentage increase in the number of offences and crimes made known to the police involving the use of firearms over the past 10 years.

Mr. Mellor: Statistics of notifiable offences recorded by the police in which firearms of all types, including air weapons, were reported to have been used are published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", (tables 3.1 and 3.2 of the latest edition, for 1985, Cm. 10). In 1985, 9,742 such offences were recorded, 153 per cent. more than in 1975.

Fresh Start

39. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the fresh start proposals in the prison department.

Mr. Mellor: Discussions with the prison service trade unions about the revised offer published on 9 March have been concluded and the unions principally concerned are now in the process of balloting their members. We hope that all involved will seize the opportunity given by the package on offer to provide a fresh start for the prison service.

Police Officers (Ethnic Minorities)

40. Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current number of police officers from ethnic minorities compared with the figure for 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 31 January 1987, 933 police officers in England and Wales were members of the ethnic minorities, compared with 268 on 31 December 1979.

Holidaymakers (Postal Votes)

41. Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next intends to meet representatives of the electoral registration officers to discuss implementation of the scheme of postal votes for holidaymakers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to meet registration officers' representatives. The provisions of the Representation of the People Act 1985, and the Representation of the People Regulations 1986, which enable holidaymakers to apply for an absent vote, came into operation on 1 January this year in respect of elections on or after 16 February. There was full consultation with the bodies representing electoral registration officers on the content of the regulations, which include the prescribed requirements for absent voting applications from holidaymakers, before the regulations were laid before Parliament.

Guildford Bombing

42. Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to the new evidence presented since the last statement on the case of those convicted of the Guildford bombing; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have asked Mr. Paul Hill's solicitor to let us have a copy of a statement made by Mrs. Yvonne Fox, who appeared in the "First Tuesday" television programme of 3 March. When this is received, we shall consider whether any further inquiries are necessary. We are already considering other matters raised in the programme and other material sent to us.

Community Crime Prevention

43. Mr. Matthew Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies his Department has carried out into the effectiveness of community crime prevention schemes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The research and planning unit and the crime prevention unit of the Home Office both carry out substantial programmes of research in this area. Current studies include work on neighbourhood and crime, inner-city housing estates and community involvement in crime prevention. The 1986-87 programme of the research and planning unit is in the Library and the 1987-88 programme will be published in June this year.

Extradition (America)

44. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with the United States authorities about extradition procedures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: There have been no recent discussions with the United States authorities on extradition procedures, but officials are in frequent contact with their United States counterparts on extradition cases and related policy issues.

Civil Defence (Nuclear Accidents)

45. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has on the extent to which civil defence measures could be used to cope with a major nuclear reactor accident.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government believe that, particularly at local level, there are many similarities in the practical response to all major emergencies, including nuclear. Local authorities are encouraged to prepare emergency plans on an all hazards basis and those who properly meet their responsibilities under the civil defence regulations will have a range of resources — including trained staff, plans and communications facilities — that can be used effectively in any major peacetime emergency.

Unemployment and Crime

46. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the degree of causal connection between unemployment and crime.

Mr. Mellor: Research has not shown significant associations between increases in recorded crime and increases in unemployment. The article "Unemployment and Crime", in Home Office Research Bulletin No. 14, reviewed research evidence on the association between unemployment and crime and concluded that little could be learned from studies of this topic at aggregate level.

Burglary

50. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the increase in burglary between (a) 1974 and 1979 and (b) 1979 and 1986.

Mr. Mellor: The number of offences of burglary recorded by the police in England and Wales increased by an average of 2·6 per cent. per year between 1974 and 1979, and by 7·9 per cent. a year between 1979 and 1986. Statistics of recorded offences are published each year in the Command Paper "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (table 2.10 of the issue for 1985) and for 1986 in Home Office Statistical Bulletin, 4/87. Results from crime surveys imply that much of these increases in recorded burglary was due to a rise in the proportion of domestic burglaries being reported to the police. This rise in reporting is discussed in chapter 2 of the 1984 Command Paper (Cmnd. 9621: paras. 2.6 to 2.13).

Legal Process

51. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce further measures to speed up the legal process.

Mr. Mellor: The steps which we are taking were outlined in the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) on 17 February at column 559. Regulations introducing statutory time limits on periods in custody in criminal proceedings in the three police areas of Avon and Somerset, Kent and west midlands came into force yesterday.

Crimes of Violence

52. Mr. Jessel asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action Her Majesty's Government are now taking to combat crimes of violence.

Mr. Mellor: We are continuing to provide the police, the courts, the probation service and the prisons with the resources they need and additional help for victims. Last November, working groups of the Home Office standing conference on crime prevention published reports on measures which can be taken to prevent commercial robbery and violence associated with licensed premises. Later this year, we hope to issue a free booklet advising women about precautions against violent crime. Our research programme aims at a better understanding of violent crime.

Obscene Publications Bill

54. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the Obscene Publications Bill.

Mr. Mellor: We have received 101 written representations from hon. Members, public and private bodies and members of the public, the majority of which were in favour of my hon. Friend's Bill. My right hon. Friend also met representatives of the Lords and Commons all-party family and child protection group on 25 March who expressed to him the group's support for the Bill.

Mr. David Sands

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will ask the chief constable of Hampshire for a report into the circumstances surrounding the death of Mr. David Sands, a former employee of Easams, an associated company of Marconi.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Hampshire police that inquiries are continuing into the death of Mr. Sands, that the matter has been reported to the coroner, and that an inquest will be opened on 3 April.

WALES

Housing Statistics

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many houses in each local authority area in Wales are deemed unfit; what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1976-77; and what proportion these figures represent of the housing stock in each area;

(2) what proportion of the public sector housing stock in each of the local authorities in Wales are in need of repairs.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Previous Welsh house condition surveys were carried out in 1968, 1973, 1976 and 1981. The results were published at county level. Reliable estimates of unfitness and repair in each local authority district will not be available until the results of the 1986 Welsh house condition survey became known.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many houses especially designed for the elderly have been built by each local authority in Wales in each year since 1976-77.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Statistics on dwellings built for the elderly were not collected centrally prior to 1984. The completion figures for the subsequent years are given in the following table:

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many houses have been built by each local authority in Wales in each year since 1976-77.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the current and capital expenditure per head on housing in each of the local authorities in Wales during the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many households in Wales do not have (a) an inside bath, (b) an inside toilet and (c) a hot water tap in each local authority area; and what proportion of the total of households in each area they represent in each case.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information requested on inside baths and toilets is shown in the following table, for 1981. Information on the number of households without a hot water tap is not available.

	Households in 1981 without inside toilet		Households in 1981 without inside bath

Homelessness

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many homeless persons there are in each local authority area in Wales; and what proportion of the population of those areas they represent.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Information relating to the number of persons currently homeless is not collected centrally. The number of persons accepted as homeless by each local authority during 1986 and the percentage of the population they represent are shown in the following table:

Cancer

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales which health authorities in Wales have started computerised schemes for cervical cancer screening and which intend to start such schemes by the end of 1987.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Clwyd and Powys health authorities have already started computerised call and recall systems for cervical cancer screening. East Dyfed (in conjunction with Pembrokeshire), Gwent, Gwnedd and Mid Glamorgan health authorities all intend to implement computerised call and recall systems by the end of this year. South Glamorgan already operates a computerised recall system and hopes to introduce a computerised call system in the Autumn. West Glamorgan health authority also operates a computerised recall system but does not expect to introduce a computerised call system until the beginning of 1988.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average waiting time of women in the Clwyd health authority area who have had tests for cervical cancer to receive details of the test; and how the waiting time compares with the average waiting time for such results elsewhere in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information requested is not yet available centrally. Welsh Office circular WHC(86)31 advised all health authorities that test results were to be notified at the most within eight weeks of the test being taken. The Department will shortly be issuing a further circular which, amongst other matters, will ask health authorities to indicate their performance against this target. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman when, later this year, this information is available.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many operations have been performed on women suffering from cervical cancer in (a) the Clwyd health authority area and (b) Wales as a whole in each of the past five years;

(2) how many operations have been performed on women suffering from cancer of the breast in (a) the Clwyd health authority area and (b) Wales as a whole in each of the past five years;

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information requested is not readily available. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible and place a copy in the Library of the House.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many women have died from cervical cancer in (a) the Clwyd health authority area and (b) Wales as a whole in each of the past five years;

(2) how many women have died from cancer of the breast in (a) the Clwyd health authority area and (b) Wales as a whole in each of the past five years.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information is given in the following table:

Cause of death	Number of deaths
	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
Malignant neoplasm of female breast (ICD174):

Malignant neoplasm of cervix uteri (ICD180):
Wales	133	118	136	114	139
Clwyd DHA	20	14	22	22	16

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average waiting time of women in the Clwyd health authority area who have had tests for breast cancer to be informed of the results of the test; how long it takes for the requisite surgery to be carried out on those women in need of such surgery; and how these waiting times compare with waiting times elsewhere in Wales.

Mr. Robinson: The information is not collected centrally.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will publish a table showing urgent cases on hospital in-patient waiting lists in each health authority in Wales and the number of cases waiting per 1,000 population for each year since 1979;

(2) if he will publish a table showing non-urgent cases on hospital in-patient waiting lists in each health authority in Wales and the number of cases waiting per 1,000 population for each year since 1979.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The available information is given in the following table. Information for 1979 is not available in the form requested.

Education Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the number of pupils in classes of 31 and over in each education authority in Wales for each year since 1979 in (a) the maintained primary sector and (b) the maintained secondary sector, and showing the percentage of such pupils in relation to the total number of pupils in Wales; and if he will also give the comparable percentage figure for England.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Information on the number of pupils in classes analysed in size bands is not collected centrally.

ENVIRONMENT

Thamesmead Estate

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes that the Thamesmead Estate should be transferred to Thamesmead Town Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now intends to issue a direction to the London Residuary Body under section 65 of the Local Government Act 1985 to dispose of Thamesmead to Thamesmead Town.

Mr. John Patten: It remains our intention that the future of Thamesmead be settled as soon as possible, in the interests of all the residents and of the board and staff of Thamesmead Town. We are studying the observations made by the courts on 27 and 30 March, in dismissing the applications before them for judicial review, before deciding on next steps.

Derelict Land Grants

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Mid-Staffordshire on Tuesday 17 March, Official Report, column 433, regarding the number of schemes for which derelict land grants have been paid in Staffordshire in the last five years, he will publish in the Official Report the number and details of schemes which have attracted grants in (a) Lichfield district council, (b) Cannock Chase district council and (c) Stafford borough council during the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: In the period 1982 to 1987, 10 schemes attracted derelict land grants totalling £1,141,210 in Lichfield district council, 87 schemes attracted derelict land grants totalling £10,508,099 in Cannock Chase district council and one scheme attracted derelict land grant of £288,374 in Staffordshire borough council. Details of these schemes could be made available only at disproportionate cost and would divert staff from the priority task of processing current applications for derelict land grant.

Ammonia

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effects of increasing levels of ammonia in the United Kingdom since 1957; and where the cases occurred.

Mr. Waldegrave: Although ammonia deposition contributes to overall nitrogen loading and in soils could be contributing to increased acidification, no evidence has been found in the United Kingdom of any direct effect of ammonia on crops, trees and vegetation other than in the most extreme case of accidental releases of ammonia from fertiliser plants and industrial processes.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Mikardo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how much has been spent by the London Docklands Development Corporation on publicity concerning the Canary wharf development;

(2) when the content of the master building agreement between the London Docklands Development Corporation and the developers of Canary wharf is to be made public;

(3) what public consultation has been carried out in respect of the master building agreement between the London Docklands Development Corporation and the developers of Canary wharf;

(4) how many of the houses and flats built on land owned by the London Docklands Development Corporation which were sold between July and December 1986 were sold to present or former employees of the corporation.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 25 March at columns 163-64.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to appoint an elected representative from the Association of London Authorities to the board of the London Residuary Body.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend sees no need at present to make further appointments to the London Residuary Body.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what the reason was for the appointment of Sir Peter Bowness to the board of the London Residuary Body; and when his appointment will come up for review.

Mr. Chope: Councillor Sir Peter Bowness was appointed to the London Residuary Body as the member representing the London Boroughs Co-ordinating Committee, after consultation with that committee, and in the light of his knowledge and experience of local government. His current appointment expires on 11 August 1988.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Hill asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Ordnance Survey to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Waldegrave: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 11 May to 15 May.

Liverpool Arena

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will give approval to the Liverpool arena project proposed by the Merseyside Development Corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that Arena Associates Ltd. is proposing to develop a multi-purpose sports complex, known as the Liverpool Arena, on a site near the Albert Dock in Liverpool and within the designated area of the Merseyside Development Corporation. The company has sought Government assistance of £3·6 million towards the £9 million development costs. This matter is currently under consideration and I hope to announce a decision shortly.

Urban Programmes

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what projects currently funded under the urban programmes will begin to lose financial support in 1987-88 in the city of Manchester through the taper mechanism; and what is the total value of this.

Mr. John Patten: The following projects begin to lose financial support in 1987-88 through the taper mechanism. The total sum involved in that year is £57,000.

North Manchester Womens' Aid Refuge.
Morning Star Hostel (Mary & Joseph).
Manchester and Salford Family Service Unit "Drop in".
YDT 42nd Street Community Mental Health.
Manchester and Salford Methodist Mission Family Support Centre.
NACRO Lifeline for Drug Users.
Platt Lane Methodist Church.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will assist local authority planning by bringing forward the date at which decisions on specific projects to be funded under the urban programme are made.

Mr. John Patten: Under the arrangements which ensure the effective targeting of the urban programme, all projects must be put forward and assessed in the context of a strategy set out in an inner area programme (IAP). Each IAP is processed as quickly as possible after it is received. I am keen that local authorities should submit their IAPs well before the beginning of the financial year to which they relate, and for 1987-88 most local authorities have been able to do so.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what projects currently funded under the urban programme will call for financial support in 1987-88 in the city of Manchester.

Mr. John Patten: This will depend on the decision to be taken on Manchester's complete inner area programme for 1987-88, which has yet to be submitted to me.

Housing

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury, of 16 January, Official Report, columns 331-2, on what basis his Department estimates the cost of (a) building a council house or flat in Greater London at around £7,000 in the first year and (b) acquiring a council house or flat for letting in Greater London at around £5,500 in the first year; and if he will identify separately his Department's estimate of the cost of (1) repaying interest on capital, (2) management and (3) maintenance of the property.

Mr. Tracey: The information requested is given in the following table. The figures relate to 1985-86 London costs and are based on an interest rate of 11 per cent.

	New Build £	Acquisition £
Interest on capital	[1]6,127	[2]4,645
Management	437	437
Maintenance	413	413
	6,977	5,495

[1] Based on land and construction costs (including fees) for local authority dwellings.

[2] Based on uprated 1984 prices for local authority dwellings plus an allowance of £10,000 for renovation costs. (Since the calculation was made 1985 prices have become available; the effect would be to raise the interest figure shown to £4,708).

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the current and capital expenditure per head on housing in England during the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Tracey: Current expenditure by English local authorities and new towns from their housing revenue accounts in 1985-86 represented on average £122 per head of population.

Capital expenditure by local authorities, new towns, the Housing Corporation and central Government on housing in England represented on average £74 per head of population.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total public expenditure on housing in the United Kingdom as a proportion of the gross domestic product in each year from 1976 to the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Tracey: Total public expenditure on housing in the United Kingdom from 1976 to 1985 is shown in the table as a percentage of gross domestic product at factor cost. The definition is the same as in the answer given to the hon. Member on 23 May 1986 at columns 370-371 in the Official Report. Figures for some of the earlier years have been revised in the light of later information.

[1] Discontinuity between 1982 and 1983 is due to introduction of housing benefit and consequent exclusion of rent from supplementary benefit paid to tenants.

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the objectives of Her Majesty's Government's housing policy.

Mr. John Patten: Our policy is to encourage the maximum spread of owner-occupation, and the maintenance and improvement of the existing housing stock.

The Government also hope to introduce further legislation to encourage the supply of more homes for renting in the private sector, while ensuring a vigorous housing association movement.

Office and Industrial Premises

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals there are to alter the current demarcation between offices and light industrial premises, particularly with regard to tailors' workshops; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: In the consultation paper published on 16 June 1986, the Government set out their proposals for modernising the Town and Country Planning (Use Classes) Order. These included a proposal for the creation of a new "business" class by merging the existing light industrial and office use classes (except for use for financial or professional services provided direct to the public visiting the premises). We are considering the responses which we have received.

Out-of-Town Retail Developments

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the out-of-town retail developments which are currently before his Department for consideration.

Mr. Tracey: I shall answer this question shortly.

Capital Allocations

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what were the total capital allocations in each of the five service blocks in 1985-86 for (a) all London boroughs; (b) the City of London (c) the Greater London council, (d) the Inner London education authority, (e) the Metropolitan police and (f) the whole of Greater London;

(2) what were the total allocations in each of the five service blocks in 1986-87 and 1987-88 for (a) all London boroughs, (b) the City of London, (c) the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority, (d) the waste regulation authorities, (e) the Inner London education authority, (f) the Metropolitan police and (g) the whole of Greater London.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is in respect of capital allocations issued to date on the five service blocks which make up the DOE/LA1 cash limit. The figures for 1985-86 for the other services block include £10,591,000 supplementary allocations issued to authorities which complied with the Secretary of State's request for restraint on capital expenditure in1984-85. The Metropolitan police do not receive capital expenditure allocations under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 since their expenditure is separately controlled by the Home Office.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the latest position regarding the future of St. George's Hall, Liverpool.

Mr. John Patten: None. The future of the hall is a matter for its owners, Liverpool city council.

Local Government (Widdicombe Report)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is yet in a position to announce further implementation of the Widdicombe report on local government; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Boyson: As my right hon. Friend made clear when the Widdicombe report was published on 19 June, the Government intend to weigh the public response to the report before drawing their own conclusions. The consultation period has ended and the Government are considering the responses received.

Trafalgar Square

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has anything to add to his answer of 19 February to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Mrs. Short) Official Report, column 741, about meetings in Trafalgar square; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have approved a major scheme for a complete refurbishment of Trafalgar square. The cleaning and repair of Nelson's column, which is currently in progress, is the first stage of this exercise and should be completed in May. While the column and the immediate area are surrounded by scaffolding and a hoarding I do not consider it in the interests of public safety to allow meetings on the square which would attract large numbers of people. I have therefore refused permission for some demonstrations by organisations which have traditionally held meetings on the square and would in normal circumstances be permitted to do so.

Each new application will be considered on its merits and in the light of Metropolitan police advice. During the period when the square is cleared prior to the main refurbishment it should be possible for the larger gatherings to be resumed temporarily.

The main refurbishment, which includes relaying the paving, will start in the summer and take about two years. During that time no meetings can be allowed on the square though there will always be some room for pedestrians. The square will, however, be completely cleared in December 1987 and 1988 to allow the traditional Christmas and new year celebrations to take place.

Green Belt

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much the area of approved green belt has increased between 1979 and 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The extent of the approved green belt in England has more than doubled since 1979. In broad terms about 1·8 million acres were approved by 1979 and the figure is now about 4·5 million acres. Estimated figures for each green belt are set out in the table.

The general extent of each green belt is indicated in county structure plans. The detailed boundaries are defined in local plans, where they exist, or in old style development plans. In some areas the detailed boundaries have not yet been settled. For these reasons the figures in the table are approximate.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Emergency Bunkers

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current scheduled date of commencement for the contruction of the proposed three emergency bunkers in Northern Ireland; on which bunker work is to commence first; and what is the up-to-date estimate of the costs of the proposed bunkers.

Mr. Scott: It is proposed that the three Northern Ireland emergency centres will be provided through a phased building programme over the next six years at an estimated cost of £7·8 million. Work on the first of these sites, at Ballymena, is due to start by June 1987. No date has yet been scheduled for work to commence on either of the other sites.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the prepared lists of those who are to go into each of the three proposed bunkers in the event of nuclear attack were last reviewed; and whether those on such lists have been involved in any training or planning meetings.

Mr. Scott: The lists are currently being reviewed. There is a continuing training programme.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what work it is currently envisaged would be carried out in the three proposed emergency bunkers in the event of nuclear attack; and by whom.

Mr. Scott: It is intended that all essential services to the community will be co-ordinated from the three proposed emergency centres should normal peacetime arrangements for these services be threatened or damaged during a war emergency. Personnel who have the necessary expertise for this task will be drawn from all the essential services, from the Northern Ireland Office, the Northern Ireland Departments and from industry.

Mount Eden Park, Belfast

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether any decision has yet been taken on the long-term role of the building at Mount Eden park, Belfast.

Mr. Scott: The building at Mount Eden park, Belfast, continues to be used for civil defence training. No decision has yet been taken on its longer term use.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether consultations about arrangements in the event of a nuclear attack or operating the proposed emergency bunkers have taken place with district councils, their officers, area boards or their officers, or officers of public services including water service, roads service and electricity supply.

Mr. Scott: Yes.

Royal Ulster Constabulary (Discrimination)

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, pursuant to the recent judgments of the European Court and the decision of the industrial tribunal in respect of the successful claims by a number of full-time and part-time women reserve constables of the Royal Ulster Constabulary that they had been discriminated against by the Chief Constable, he will publish in the Official Report (a) the date on which the first lawful complaint of discrimination was made by these women against the Chief Officer or the Police Authority for Northern Ireland, (b) the dates of the principal hearings before industrial tribunals and courts in Northern Ireland, (c) the date on which this issue was brought before the European Court and when it was concluded there and (d) the date of the final orders by the industrial tribunal awarding compensation to the women and costs against the Chief Constable.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:

a. The first complaint was made to the industrial tribunal on 27 November 1980. Additional complaints were made subsequently by further parties.
b. The principal hearings before the industrial tribunal took place on 28 May 1981, 1 September 1981, 31 December 1981, 21 May 1982, 10 August 1983, 8 August 1984, 28-30 January 1987, 2-5 February 1987 and 9 March 1987.
Hearings before the High Court took place on 29 October 1982, 14 January 1983, 4 February 1983 and 11 February 1983.
Hearings before the Court of Appeal took place on 31 May 1983 and 10 October 1983.
c. The industrial tribunal decided on 8 August 1984 to refer the issue to the European Court of Justice. The court gave its final decision on 15 May 1986.
d. No compensation orders were made by the industrial tribunal as agreement had already been reached with the Chief Constable. Costs were awarded against the Chief Constable on 9 March 1987.

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland pursuant to the recent industrial tribunal decision in respect of full-time and part-time women reserve police officers, what amount of compensation was ordered to be paid to each of these women in recognition of the discrimination the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary was adjudged to have inflicted upon them.

Mr. Scott: None. The tribunal was not called to make compensation orders, as agreement on levels of compensation had been reached between the Chief Constable and the applicants.

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, in the light of the recent industrial tribunal decision in respect of full-time and part-time women reserve police officers, he will state what legal costs were ordered to be paid to each of these women.

Mr. Scott: The legal costs incurred in proceedings before the European court and the industrial tribunal were awarded against the Chief Constable of the RUC. The costs have not yet been finalised but I shall write to my hon. Friend when the information is available.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Mentally Handicapped People (Civil Rights)

Mrs. Shields asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards civil rights for mentally handicapped people.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Benefits

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if local social security officers are able to make payments to claimants whose carpets are destroyed by flooding or fire and who are in receipt of supplementary benefit.

Mr. Lyell: Where a claimant is affected by a disaster — for example, a fire or a flood — and satisfies the provisions of regulation 8 of the Supplementary Benefit (Urgent Cases) Regulations, then a payment may be considered for miscellaneous furniture and household equipment needs, which could include a carpet. It is for the independent adjudication authorities to determine in any individual case whether a disaster has occurred and if a payment is appropriate; and that decision is subject to the claimant's right of appeal to the social security appeal tribunal.

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether any new information is available on the payment of supplementary benefit to people in residental care and nursing homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lyell: New figures have just become available on the number of people in private and voluntary residential care and nursing homes claiming supplementary benefit. Provisional results of the quarterly statistical Inquiry of February 1986 show that there were 90,000 people in private and voluntary residential care and nursing homes being helped by supplementary benefit compared to 42,000 in December 1984. There have been suggestions that the supplementary benefit limits for residential care and nursing homes are too low and that people without means of their own can no longer get places in homes. The question is kept under close review but these latest figures certainly do not support such a contention.

The provisional estimates also show that in February 1986 the total cost of the supplementary benefit element of support for people in homes was £459 million with an average weekly payment of £98.08. The increase in average payments is broadly in line with increases in the benefit limits during the period December 1984 to February 1986.

We also now have the preliminary results from the pilot studies, conducted under the auspices of the social policy research unit at the University of York to test the feasibility of assessing the care needs of benefit claimants in private and voluntary residential care homes. The vast majority, 93 per cent. were assessed as needing residential care at the time of admission to the home given the alternative services then available. The assessors were also asked to consider whether residents would have needed residential care if additional services had been available. They considered that if additional ordinary services such as sheltered housing or day care had been available, 90 per cent. would have needed residential care, and that even if more intensive services, such as full-time companion or night sitting service, had been available, residential care would have been needed in 83 per cent. of cases.

The results of the pilot studies need to be used carefully. They are being considered by the joint central and local government working party which is currently looking at the question of harmonisation of financial support for people in residential care and are relevant to the overall review of community care being carried out by Sir Roy Griffiths.

Community Psychiatric Nurses

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many community psychiatric nurses are employed by each district health authority; and in each case, how many are based in hospitals, and how many in the community.

Mr. Newton: Such information as is available is shown in the table. It is not possible to identify staff as being specifically based in hospitals or in the community. Figures for September 1985 are the latest available to this level of detail.

Notes

(1) These figures include all registered and enrolled nurses and unqualified nursing staff employed in the community psychiatric service. It is not possible to provide separate information for those nurses who have undertaken the post-basic community psychiatric nursing course.

(2) Because the identification of these staff depends on accurate recording of location and occupation details on district health authority payrolls it is possible that some staff engaged on the duties in question are not actually recorded as working on those duties. Some community staff are hospital based and are recorded as hospital staff. Also some may be on the payroll of one district but working in another.

(3) Includes staff of London post-graduate special health authorities.

(4) All figures have been rounded to nearest one whole-time equivalent.

Occupational Pensioners

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his most recent estimates of the number of occupational pensioners who both pay income tax and are in receipt of housing benefit.

Mr. Major: The latest estimate, based on information from the family expenditure survey 1985, is that the number of tax units (single people or married couples) in receipt of an occupational pension, paying income tax and in receipt of housing benefit is 1 million.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people claimed supplementary benefit in the Don Valley constituency in 1986-87; what percentage change that represents from 1985-86; and what was the percentage change in (i) staff handling supplementary benefit and (ii) all staff at his Department's local offices for the same period.

Mr. Lyell: Don Valley constituency is covered by four of the Department's local offices, Doncaster East, Doncaster West, Wath on Dearne and Mexborough. The latter is a national insurance office and does not deal with supplementary benefit. The boundaries of the offices are not conterminous with those of the constituency.

The latest available information on claims relates to 10 March 1987. The comparison has therefore been based on the weekly average number of claims received in the two periods.

	Doncaster East	Doncaster West	Wath on Dearne
1985-86
Numbers of claims (52 weeks)	13,703	17,650	9,393
Weekly average	264	339	181
1986-87 (to 10 March 1987)
Number of claims (48 weeks)	12,321	14,562	8,410
Weekly average	257	303	175
Percentage change in the weekly average	−3	−11	−3

The percentage changes in staffing between 1985-86 and 1986-87 are:

	All Staff	Supplementary Benefit Staff
Doncaster East	+ 4 per cent.	+ 4 per cent.
Doncaster West	+ 6 per cent.	+ 10 per cent.
Wath on Dearne	+ 6 per cent.	+ 6 per cent.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of people in (a) the north-west, (b) Greater Manchester county, (c) Oldham, (d) Rochdale and (e) for each of his Department's offices covering Littleborough and Saddleworth constituency, currently in receipt of supplementary benefit; how many of the claimants are retirement pensioners; how many are unemployed persons; and what were the corresponding figures for May 1979.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 5 March 1987, c. 675-76]: Information is not available precisely in the form requested. The available information for parts (a) to (d) is as follows:

Numbers in receipt of supplementary benefit (thousands)

[1] The figures for May 1979 are in respect of the Department's two former regions, North-West (Manchester) and North-West (Merseyside) which were subsequently merged, together with 5 offices from the Northern Region, to form the present North-West Region.

[2] Latest date for which the information is available.

[3] Because the boundaries of Greater Manchester county and Oldham and Rochdale metropolitan boroughs are not conterminous with those of the Department's local offices, information in respect of those areas is available only as average figures for each year.

[4] Earliest date for which the information is available.

[5] The number of unemployed people in the standard north-west region (Department of Employment) which is not conterminous with the DHSS region increased from 167,300 in May 1979 to 430,900 in February 1986.

Orthotic Services

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations his Department has received from the director of the disabilities study unit concerning the future of orthotic services; what reply is being sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The director of the disabilities study unit has written to me about "A Future for the Orthotic Services", the report of a working party set up by the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation. I have told the director that we are anxious to ensure that the orthotic service should cater for patient needs in a cost effective way which would at the same time provide a good standard of service for patients. We are considering how best to take this forward.

Amnesia

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will encourage local authority social service departments to provide funds for the rehabilitation of sufferers from severe amnesia;

(2) whether any residential accommodation is provided by the National Health Service for those suffering from severe amnesia;

(3) if he will request the National Health Service regions to assess the adequacy of their provision for those suffering from severe amnesia; and if he will encourage the establishment of regional centres;

(4) what information he has on (a) the number of cases of severe amnesia that occur annually and (b) the National Health Service provision for such cases.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Health Centre, Moulsecoombe

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to persuade the South East regional health authority that the proposed start date for the health centre on the Moulsecoombe estate should be brought forward from 1992 in line with its agreed priority for the area.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people currently make national insurance contributions.

Mr. Major: The most recent available information is that 23,603,000 people in the United Kingdom paid at least one national insurance contribution during 1984-85.

Retirement Pension

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the percentage increase in the state retirement pension in each year since 1979.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 27 February at columns 444-47.

AIDS

Mr. Stevens asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what further steps he is taking to combat the spread of AIDS through drug misuse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: The use of contaminated needles and syringes by drug misusers is a major way in which the AIDS virus is spread. We are therefore taking a range of measures designed both to reinforce our anti-drugs strategy and to curb the spread of AIDS amongst drug misusers and from them into the general population.

First, we are continuing to give priority to our strategy for the prevention of drug misuse. The dangers of injecting will be highlighted in the next phase of our AIDS and drugs publicity campaigns.

Second, we are providing an extra £1 million in 1987-88 to help drug misuse services play a growing role in the fight against AIDS. This means central Government will be providing over £6·2 million specifically for drug misuse services during the coming year to add to the contributions health authorities are already making from their own budgets and the £17·5 million which has been allocated to over 180 local projects over six years. The new money is being allocated to the health regions in proportion to their population in the 15 to 34 years age group, which is considered to be at greatest risk of misusing drugs.

Third, we are establishing a number of special schemes where drug misusers who have not yet stopped injecting will be able both to receive counselling and exchange used and possibly infected needles and syringes for clean equipment. We have consulted the interested professional and other bodies nationally and locally about these schemes and our proposals have received a wide measure of support. The new schemes will be in the following areas:

Bristol
Carlisle
Dagenham
Hereford
Kingston-upon-Thames
Liverpool
London (3 schemes at St. George's Hospital, Tooting; St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington; and University College Hospital)
Peterborough
Portsmouth
Sheffield

In some cases we will be building on existing exchange arrangements; in others these will be completely new schemes. All the schemes will be closely monitored to help assess their effect on the behaviour of drug misusers and the part this might play in combatting the spread of infection.

These measures reflect the priority which the Government attach both to tackling drug misuse and to protecting the population as a whole from the threat of AIDS.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the weekly amounts of standard housing benefit currently payable (assuming a grant-aided period of 38 weeks) to a single grant-aided student without dependants or disability, aged under 25, studying on an advanced course at a London college and living in privately rented accommodation by way of (i) rent allowance for eligible rents of £18, £20, £22, £24, £26, £28 and £30 per week; and (ii) rate rebate (assuming the student's eligible rent to exceed £17·70 per week) for eligible rates of £2·50, £3, £4 and £5 per week; and what will be the weekly amounts of benefit payable to the same student in the same circumstances under the housing benefit scheme to be introduced under the Social Security Act 1986 on the basis that the tapers for rent allowance and rate rebate will be 60 per cent. and 20 per cent., respectively, that 20 per cent. of rates will be ineligible for benefit and upon the assumption that the basic level of income support for a claimant aged under 25 will be £25 per week; and if he will present the above information in tabulated form so as to show losses or gains as between comparable claims under the present and intended new systems.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 11 March 1987, c. 237-38]: The information requested using the assumptions specified and the proposed structure of the reformed housing benefit scheme is shown in the tables.

Under the current scheme local authorities compare student income with housing benefit needs allowances and apply a complicated structure of tapers. The needs allowances do not fully reflect the structure of supplementary benefit rates contributing to the inequities and complications of the present arrangements

The basis of the calculations in the reformed structure is a comparison between the student's grant income, for the 38-week academic year, and the assumed income support rate for single people aged 18 to 24. The weekly income of a student in London on the basis of the standard grant payable during the 1986-87 academic year is £33·72 after taking account of the amount allowed in the grant for expenses for accommodation, books and travel. The decreases in student entitlement to housing benefit, shown in the tables, arise from the application of the rent and rate tapers specified in the question to the amount by which this income exceeds the assumed income support rate of £25 per week. However, the precise level of benefit payable under the reformed scheme will vary depending on the detailed regulations, which have yet to be made, and the rates of benefit which will not be decided until the autumn. The whole system of student support, including benefits, is being looked at in the present review. We are considering how to compensate students in order to achieve our aim of removing them from the benefit system.

[1] Based on illustrative assumptions.

Notes:

(1) Both current and new scheme figures have been calculated on the basis of the standard grant of £2,246 per annum which is payable during the 1986-87 academic year to a London student living away from home. Of this grant, £17·70 a week is deducted from the student's rent in assessing housing benefit.

(2) For the new scheme calculations, £292 of the grant has been disregarded to reflect disregards on travel costs and books and equipment which do not apply at present.

(3) For the new scheme a minimum payment of 50p has been assumed.

(4) Other illustrative assumptions used are those quoted in the question.

Income Support

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is in a position to make a statement about the nature of rate assessment forms for people on income support.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 20 March 1987, c.80]: People on income support will complete the same housing benefit claim form whether they wish to be assessed for entitlement to a rate rebate, rent rebate, or rent allowance. Arrangements will be made to enable those claiming income support and housing benefit simultaneously to receive and return forms together, through the local offices of this Department. The precise details of the arrangements and of the content and design of the housing benefit form are under discussion with the local authority associations. Entitlement to housing benefit in all cases will be determined by local authorities which administer the housing benefit scheme and householders on income support will qualify for maximum housing benefit. Future alignment of income-related benefits means that authorities will not need to apply the common income test because local offices of this Department will have already done so in establishing entitlement to income support.

Cold Weather Payments

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated cost of administering cold weather payments for the period January to March 1987, assuming maximum take-up; and how much was spent on publicising these payments.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 412]: The full cost of advertising and adminstering the exceptionally cold weather scheme in the current year will be assessed at the end of the winter period. However, total advertising costs for January 1987 were about £670,000.

Additional manpower in the form of 300 overtime man-years was allocated to local offices to help process cold weather claims at a cost of some £4 million. Extra travel and subsistence in connection with overtime working and increased postage costs were also incurred.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cold weather payments have been made in 1987, in each week for which information is available, to claimants in each of the categories (a) over 65 years (b) chronically sick or disabled and (c) with a child under the age of two years.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 412]: Information is not available in the form requested. However, up to 24 February 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, approximately 1·9 million exceptionally cold weather £5 payments were made at a cost of £9·5 million.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Illegal Immigrants

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of persons proceeded against as illegal immigrants in each 12 months period ending in September, in each year from 1980 to 1985, inclusive.

Mr. Waddington: Information on persons dealt with as illegal entrants is published quarterly in the Home Office statistical bulletins on the control of immigration statistics. Figures for the periods requested are given in the following table.

Persons against whom action was commenced as illegal entrants

	Number of persons
12 months ending September—
1980	1,509
1981	[1]1,120
1982	[1]1,110
1983	986
1984	903
1985	1,083

([1]) Rounded to the nearest 10 as precise figures are not available for the quarters of 1981.

Traffic Regulation

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps, following the observation of Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary in his report for 1985, to ensure that the allocation of resources for traffic regulation enforcement takes proper account of the potential and actual consequences of motor vehicles as agencies of death and injury; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: HM's inspectors of constabulary already take account of these considerations in the course of their inspections and we are satisfied that chief officers fully appreciate the importance of effective enforcement as a contribution to road safety.

New Hall Prison, Wakefield

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the proposed future use of New Hall prison, Middlestown, Wakefield, and on the implications for the communities in Overton and Middlestown, Wakefield.

Mr. Mellor: Work is in progress to convert the former detention centre at New Hall into a closed prison for females. As a detention centre New Hall functioned as a closed establishment for male young offenders in the 17 to 20-year-old group. We do not see the change of use of New Hall as having any implications for the communities in Overton and Middlestown. If the right hon. Member has any specific concerns which he would like to bring to our notice, I will be pleased to answer them.

Crime (Clear-up Rate)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the percentage of recorded offences cleared up by the police in Wales in 1986, according to offence groups.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is given in the table.

Clear-up rates [1] for notifiable offences recorded by the police, 1986, by offence group

Wales	Percentages
Violence against the person	83
Sexual offences	86
Robbery	31
Theft and handling stolen goods	56

Criminal Damage [2]	30
Other notifiable offences	96
Total notifiable offences [2]	40

[1] The proportion of notifiable offences cleared up by the police expressed as a percentage of those recorded.
[2] Excluding offences of 'other criminal damage' value £20 and under.

Police (Establishment)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the authorised establishment and strength of the police force in Wales in 1986, according to police force areas.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information as on 31 December 1986 is as follows:

Mr. Azad Akhtar

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when Azad Akhtar—reference: TN3/IS/334/3/87—arrived in the United Kingdom; by which British post his visitor's visa was issued; when a telex was sent to the post seeking information about Mr. Akhtar; when the reply to that telex was received; and when a decision was taken on Mr. Akhtar's application to enter the United Kingdom;

(2) where Mr. Azad Akhtar has been detained pending a decision on his application to enter the United Kingdom; if he has been informed as to his eligibility to apply for release on bail; and when he was advised of his rights to appeal against any decision to refuse him entry to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waddington: Mr. Azad Akhtar arrived on 26 March with a visitor's visa issued in Bahrain. Telex inquiries were sent to the post on 27 and 31 March, and replies were received on 30 March and 1 April. He was detained pending further examination in the detention accommodation at Harmondsworth, and was informed as to his eligibility to apply for release on bail. He was refused leave to enter on 2 April following further examination and was then given notice of his right of appeal against that decision. He has been granted temporary admission pending his decision on whether or not he wishes to appeal.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a breakdown of the latest crime statistics according to the ethnic origins of the offenders.

Mr. Mellor: For many offences recorded by the police the offender is not known. Neither is information on ethnic origin regularly collected centrally for known offenders, apart from those received into prison department establishments. Information available on the ethnic appearance of offenders in the Metropolitan police district between 1977 and 1983 was published in a Home Office statistical bulletin issue 22/84, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Citizenship

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to make any changes in citizenship fee levels for 1987-88.

Mr. Hurd: I am pleased to say that citizenship fees for 1987-88 will be held at their present levels. This is a tribute to the staff who, by bringing about improvements in the cost effectiveness of the service, have enabled us to plan on the basis that over the next financial year fees should continue to cover the cost of issuing certificates. I have placed in the Library a copy of the nationality fees budget income and expenditure account for the year ending 31 March 1988.

PRIME MINISTER

Moscow (Visit)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister how many civil servants accompanied her to Moscow; from which Departments they came; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Fifteen civil servants, of whom nine were secretarial and support staff, accompanied me and my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary to Moscow. Nine were from No. 10, five from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, and one from the Central Office of Information.

ENERGY

Coal Industry

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the total capital expenditure over the past five years on developing the coal mining industry; and what proportion of this has taken place in the coalfields of Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Capital expenditure in the coal industry over the past five years has totalled almost £3·3 billion, of which £175 million (at outturn prices) has been invested in Wales.

Mersey Barrage

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he expects the feasibility study into the proposed Mersey barrage to be completed on time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Mersey Barrage Company is making good progress in its work and expects that the feasibility study will be completed on time by the end of 1987.

Welsh Anthracite

Mr. Woodcock asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what was the total production by the National Coal Board of Welsh anthracite in 1984, 1985 and 1986, respectively; and what is the anticipated production in 1987;

(2) what tonnages of Welsh anthracite were allocated for disposal to each Nationl Coal Board region in 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987 respectively;

(3) What tonnage of Welsh anthracite was shipped to Northern Ireland in 1984, 1985 and 1986, respectively; and what is proposed to be shipped in 1987;

(4) what tonnage of Welsh anthracite was exported in 1984, 1985 and 1986, respectively; and what exports are planned for 1987.

Mr. David Hunt [pursuant to his reply, 20 March 1987, c. 648]: Total production by British Coal of Welsh anthacite since 1983-84 is as follows:

1983-84 — 1,858·8 thousand tonnes
1984-85 — 1,044·1 thousand tonnes
1985-86 — 2,288·2 thousand tonnes

Figures for 1986-87 and projections for 1987-88 are not available.

Information on disposals by British Coal of Welsh anthracite since 1983-84 is as follows:

NATIONAL FINANCE

Departmental Contracts

Mr. Wheeler asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what advice is given to contracting Departments to ensure that they do not award contracts involving unlimited liability which cannot be covered on the insurance market.

Mr. Brooke: None. As in the private sector, a contractor may be held responsible without limit for costs arising from any default which would otherwise fall on the public purse as a result of his action. This is reflected in the standard conditions used in departmental contracts. In certain cases he may be required to carry specified levels of insurance cover. Otherwise it is a matter for him to decide what insurance he needs and can obtain.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Meacher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the level of investment, capital consumption and net investment each year in manufacturing industry since 1970.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

VAT

Dr. Hampson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from The Library Asssociation concerning the continuation of zero rating on books and other literature after the harmonisation of value added tax arrangements within the European Community; and what response he has made.

Mr. Brooke: The chief executive of the Library Association wrote to my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts on 9 February. His letter was passed to me for reply. In my letter of 12 March I informed the association that the European Commission has not yet made detailed proposals for the approximation of VAT rates but that, when it does, the proposals will require unanimous agreement. Questions concerning the VAT treatment of books and other literature will therefore remain wholly a matter for national decision and subject to full parliamentary consideration.

South Africa (Military Equipment)

Mr. Cabora asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will give details of all cases in which prosecutions of Customs compounding have taken place in relation to the supply of arms and related material to South Africa since the adoption of United Nations Security Council resolution 418, 1977;

(2) what action has been taken following the discovery by Her Majesty's Customs officials on 27 February 1986, that cargoes on board the MS St Maguire at Felixstowe described as agricultural machinery bound for a company known as M & I Engineers Pty, Pretoria, South Africa, were in fact components of 140 mm howitzers being exported in breach of the United Nations mandatory arms embargo; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what action will be taken by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to investigate allegations that the MV Lady Anita exported 140 howitzers from Felixstowe on 28 November 1984 which were destined for South Africa in breach of the United Nations mandatory arms embargo.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Excise Duties

Mr. George Gardiner asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the estimated receipts in 1986-87 and the forecast receipts in 1987-88 from excise duties on spirits, beer, wine, made wine, cider and perry, respectively; and if he will explain any differences or special factors.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Clement Shaw Ltd.

Mr. Cabora asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of the results of the investigation into Clement Shaw Ltd. in relation to possible breaches of the United Nations mandatory arms embargo; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Company Cars

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report his best estimate of the cost of new cars purchased by companies in 1986-87 for their own use, including by their directors and employees, or for the use of other business under lease or contract hire.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I have been asked to reply.

I regret that estimates of this nature are not available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report representative figures showing the current annual cost to companies of providing new cars for the use of directors and higher-paid employees where the beneficiary is entitled to choose his own car within a specified price, but where (i) the car is acquired under a straightfoward lease and (ii) the whole cost of putting the car on the road and maintaining it is carried by the supplier under a term-mileage contract; and if he will provide figures for a representative price range of cars within each category of scale charge, and for a Roll-Royce.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I have been asked to reply.

I regret that the information is not available.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Science and Engineering Research Council

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much has been disbursed by the Science and Engineering Research Council teaching in companies scheme in each year since the scheme was introduced; how much has been disbursed to (a) individuals and (b) companies in Yorkshire and Humberside in each year since this scheme was introduced; how much is to be disbursed to individuals and companies in Yorkshire and Humberside under the council's latest allocation; what representations about this allocation he has received; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The following table shows the information requested in the first part of the question:

Amount disbursed by SERC on teaching company scheme

£K

Financial Year	Net Expenditure[3]
1976-77	24·5
1977-78	81·5
1978-79	177·5
1979-80	231·5
1980-81	606·0
1981-82	663·5
1982-83	1,006·0
1983-84	1,600·0
1984-85	2,027·0
1985-86	2,452·5
1986-87	[1]2,760·0
1987-88	[2] 3,585·0

[1] Provisional outturn
[2] Estimates
[3] The teaching company scheme is jointly funded. Up to 1984-85, it was funded on a 50-50 basis by the SERC and the Department of Trade and Industry. Since 1985-86, the Economic and Social Research Council has contributed an additional £80,000 a year matched by the DTI. The Northern Ireland Department of Economic Development joined the scheme in 1986-87 when it contributed £20,000. Its estimated contribution in 1987-88 is £150,000.

Because of the way in which TCS records are held, disproportionate cost would be involved in extracting figures for a particular region such as Yorkshire and Humberside. No representations about regional allocations have been received.

TCS grants are made to education institutes and not to individuals or companies.

Senile Dementia

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what conclusions have been drawn by the Medical Research Council's study of the possible relationship between aluminium saucepans, aluminium rich foods and senile dementia.

Mr. Walden: I understand the MRC is studying the possible relationship between aluminium in drinking water and the prevalence of Alzheimer's disease. No conclusions can be drawn until this study is complete in 1988.

University Grants Committee

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average annual current expenditure allocated by the University Grants Committee (a) on arts students and (b) on engineering students in a university in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Walden: The estimated average net recurrent expenditure by universities per student in the 1984-85 academic year was £3,930 for arts subjects and £6,070 for engineering subjects. The UGC's recurrent grant is, however, allocated on a different basis, as described in its circular letters 22/85 and 6/87, copies of which are in the Library.

Universities and Polytechnics

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total expenditure on capital equipment in (a) universities and (b) polytechnics in the last year for which figures are available; what were the corresponding numbers of full-time equivalent students; and what were the corresponding per capita allocations on equipment in the two types of institution.

Mr. Walden: The following table relates to expenditure on equipment in the financial year 1984-85 by universities and by local authorities in respect of polytechnics. Allocations of funding for equipment are not made on a per capita basis in either sector.

	Expenditure (£m)	Student Numbers[1] (000s)	Expenditure per FTE student (£)
Universities[2]	86·7	303·8	285
Polytechnics[3]	18·7	170·8	109

Broadacres School, Hixon

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the future of Broadacres school, Hixon, Staffordshire, in the light of the representations he has received from the hon. Member for Mid-Staffordshire.

Mr. Dunn: Staffordshire LEA's proposals to reorganise educational provision in Stafford and the surrounding area, including Hixon, are currently before my right hon. Friend and a decision will be announced soon which will take into account all representations received.

Sixth Forms

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy towards the retention of sixth forms in schools, with particular reference to sixth forms with substantial numbers and a high proportion of young people undertaking two-year courses leading to examinations at the advanced general certificate of education level.

Mr. Dunn: Under the Education Act 1980 local education authorities are free to propose any pattern of school, including sixth form, organisation they may choose. My right hon. Friend considers such proposals on their merits: in doing so he takes account amongst other things of numbers, the range and diversity of the curriculum and the quality of examination results.

Capital Allocations

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will publish a table showing for each year from 1982-83 to 1985-86 inclusive (a) the total of capital allocations made to local education authorities in Greater London, (b) the total of capital expenditure bids submitted by local education authorities in Greater London and (c) the figure (a) expressed as a percentage of the figure (b); and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish a table showing for each year from 1982-83 to 1985-86 inclusive (a) the total of capital allocations made to metropolitan district education authorities outside Greater London, (b) the total of capital expenditure bids submitted by metropolitan district education authorities outside Greater London and (c) the figure (a) expressed as a percentage of the figure (b); and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will publish a table showing for each year from 1982-83 to 1985-86 inclusive (a) the total of capital allocations made to non-metropolitan county education authorities, (b) the total of capital expenditure bids submitted by non-metropolitan county education authorities and (c) the figure (a) expressed as a percentage of the figure (b); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his replies, 12 March 1987, c. 260-61]: The information requested for the years 1982-83 to 1985-86 for local education authorities within Greater London, metropolitan districts and non-metropolitan authorities as set out in the table.

WALES

Cull Cows

Mr. Best asked asked the Secretary of State for Wales if extra funds will be made available to farmers to overcome the problems of extra cull cows coming on to the market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The Commission has the necessary powers to introduce extra support through the management committee if there is undue weakness in the beef market as a result of heavy cow cullings. The budgetary and expenditure forecasts include appropriate provisions for this.

ENVIRONMENT

Ordnance Survey

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will direct the Ordnance Survey to depict on its maps at 1:25,000 and 1:50,000 scale all open land to which the public has a right of access.

Mr. Waldegrave: Ordnance Survey already depicts information on open land where this is available in a suitable form.

Frontier Regions (Conference)

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if consideration was given to representation at the fourth European conference of frontier regions in the light of invitations to both the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: This conference of frontier regions took place in Spain on 23-25 March. Officials from the 21 member states of the Council of Europe with an interest were invited; its aim was to review the problems facing transfrontier co-operation in Europe, to discuss achievements and shortcomings, and to examine prospects for the year 2000. The United Kingdom decided on this occasion not to be represented because as an island the transfrontier problems being discussed were of little relevance. I understand that the Republic of Ireland similarly sent no representatives.

Anti-fouling Products

Mr. Mudd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to compensate, or consider compensation claims from, yacht chandlers or other retailers having stock of TBT-based anti-fouling agents purchased before the implementation of the ban on such products.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have no such plans.

Pest Control

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many complaints he has received from within London with regard to nuisance caused by urban pests such as bees, foxes, wasps, cockroaches; and how many representations he has so far received, and from whom, in regard to the relevant consultation paper.

Mr. Waldegrave: A few local authorities, including some in London, have in the past suggested that their current powers were insufficinet to control various species which can cause nuisance in urban areas. We have therefore consulted on possible amendments to the Public Health Acts 1936 and 1961. Of some 290 responses to the Department's consultation document recieved up to 31 March, some 200, including 180 from beekeepers or organisations representing beekeepers, have commented on these particular proposals. As was made clear in the consultation document itself, we will in due course be placing in the Library of the House copies of all responses where the authors have agreed to this; other responses will be included in any numerical analysis of views recieved.

Development

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the relationship between his new planning circular, and circular 15/84.

Mr. Waldegrave: The draft circular on development involving agricultural land and circular 15/84 are intended to be consistent with each other. The new circular and circular 15/84, as with all circulars containing planning policy, would need to be taken into account in each particular case to the extent that each is material to the decision.

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make available in the Vote Office copies of his draft circular "Development Involving Agricultural Land."

Mr. Waldegrave: Copies of the draft circular have been available in the Vote Office since February.

Sports Grounds (Safety)

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what alterations to the November 1985 Building Regulations have been made following the recommendations contained in paragraph 3.90 of the final report of Mr. Justice Popplewell into safety at sports grounds.

(2) what guidance has been issued to local authorities sporting bodies and other interested organisations regarding the criteria applied by the November 1985 Building Regulations to the construction of sports stands, including the materials which may be used; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I shall answer these questions shortly.

Out-of-town Retail Developments

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the out-of-town retail developments which are currently before his Department for consideration.

Mr. Tracey [pursuant to his reply, 2 April 1987]: The following out-of-town retail developments are currently before the Department as appeals or applications called in for determination by the Secretary of State. The list relates to proposals for development of 20,000 sq m or more outside established shopping centres at 31 March 1987.

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General if he will publish the most recently available information to show the total number of community programme projects and places by type of project and type of sponsor.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The total number of community programme projects and authorised places, by project and sponsor type, are as follows. Table 1 gives information about projects, and table 2 places as at 20 February 1987.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will list the net jobs loss for (a) all employees, (b) employees in manufacturing and construction (c) employees in manufacturing, (d) employees in engineering and allied industries and (e) employees in metal manufacturing, and the percentage fall, from June 1979 to the latest date for which figures are available for (i) Greater London, (ii) Birmingham, (iii) Liverpool, (iv) Manchester, (v) Newcastle, (vi) Glasgow, (vii) Cardiff, (viii) Bristol, (ix) Coventry, (x) Leicester, (xi) Bradford, (xii) Edinburgh, (xiii) Dundee and (xiv) Swansea.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 26 March 1987, c.241]: I regret the information is not available as there was no employment census in 1979 or 1980. Between census dates information about employees in employment subdivided by industry is available only for those areas listed in table 1.5 of the Employment Gazette, a copy of which is in the Library. Greater London was added to these areas in 1981.

DEFENCE

House of Commons (Ministers)

Mr. George asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list, for Sessions 1984-85, 1985-86 and for the current Session to date, the number of (a) ministerial statements, (b) private notice questions, (c) debates on Government motions, (d) debates on Opposition motions, (e) Bills passing all stages (other than Consolidated Fund Bill debates), (f) debates on the Adjournment (other than the half-hour Adjournment), (g) half-hour Adjournment debates, (h) debates on statutory instruments and (i) other debates including debates following proceedings on the Consolidated Fund Bill which required the attendance in the House of Ministers or officials in his Department.

Mr. Younger: The information requested is as follows:

	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87 to date
(a) Ministerial statements	6	4	6
(b) Private Notice Questions	2	3	—
(c) Debates on Government motions	1	1	—

[1]Includes one Private Members Bill.

Trident

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the costs and penalties involved in any cancellation of Trident; how these can be offset against savings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the event of cancellation the costs payable would reflect contractors' properly incurred liabilities at termination. (These costs should be less than the total amount committed, which currently stands at about £3 billion).

As Trident will provide the United Kingdom with much the most cost-effective minimum deterrent to succeed Polaris, the risks to our security involved in its cancellation would be very grave indeed.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from British industry and trade unions about the role of Trident within the United Kingdom economy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries about the role of Britain's independent nuclear deterrent.

Mr. Stanley: Britain's NATO partners have welcomed the contribution made to the Alliance's forces by the British nuclear deterrent and have consistently supported our efforts to maintain its effectiveness. The most recent collective expression of this support was contained in the communiqué issued following the October 1986 meeting of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group, a copy of which is in the Library. Subsequently, at his meeting with the Prime Minister at Camp David in November 1986, President Reagan confirmed his full support for the arrangements made to modernise Britain's independent nuclear deterrent with Trident.

Directorate General of Defence Quality Assurance

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the estimated cost of housing of the main units of the directorate general of defence quality assurance of Royal Arsenal unit in accordance with his Department's recommendations;

(2) when he expects to complete his appraisal of the possible location for the main units of the directorate general of defence quality assurance;

(3) if he will publish the evidence which led his Department to recommend the Royal Arsenal unit as the preferred location for the directorate general of defence quality assurance, together with the list of other locations now being considered.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 19 January 1987, at column 452. The further appraisal of the future accommodation needs of the directorate general of defence quality assurance is still in progress.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diplomatic Staff

Mr. Dicks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff accredited with diplomatic status work in the offices of the British high commission in (a) Australia, (b) India and (c) Canada.

Mr. Eggar: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Dicks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff accredited with diplomatic status work in the United Kingdom offices of (a) the Australian high commission, (b) the Indian high commission and (c) the Canadian high commission.

Mr. Eggar: The Austrialian high commission has 42 diplomatic staff; the Indian high commission 66; and the Canadian high commission 63.

Hong Kong

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has had about the Hong Kong Public Order (Amendment) Ordnance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We have received a number of representations about this ordinance. In reply we have made clear that while this is primarily a matter for the Hong Kong Government, we support the action they have taken. The legislation passed by a large majority in the Legislative Council of Hong Kong on 11 March included the repeal of a number of stringent provisions of the control of publications ordinance that had been part of the laws of Hong Kong for many years, but which have not prevented the Hong Kong media from being among the most free and outspoken in Asia. In reviewing this legislation and deciding upon these repeals, the Hong Kong Government considered that in such a small and densely-populated place as Hong Kong, it was nevertheless necessary to retain some power to act against anyone publishing false news likely to cause alarm to the public or disturb public order. The provision is not, therefore, a new one, and the result of the legislation passed on 11 March represents a major liberalisation compared with the position before that date.

Vietnamese Refugees

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what conclusions were reached in discussions he has had with other Commonwealth countries about the possible acceptance of further Vietnamese refugees into their respective countries who are presently resident in Hong Kong.

Mr. Renton: We remain in close contact with other members of the Commonwealth about the resettlement of Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong. We are grateful for their increased intakes of refugees from Hong Kong in response to our decision in 1985 to accept some 420 more of them for settlement in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the acceptance of further Vietnamese refugees, presently resident in Hong Kong, into Britain.

Mr. Renton: We are considering the question of possible further resettlement in the United Kingdom of Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong, and hope to make an announcement soon.

Visas

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will outline the emergency procedures available at the immigration departments at United Kingdom diplomatic missions in India, Pakistan and Bangladesh for the issue of visitors' visas in cases of extreme urgency.

Mr. Eggar: I refer my hon. friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Vauxhall (Mr. Holland) on 9 December 1986 at column 122.

Arms Embargo

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions, and in relation to which cases, Her Majesty's Government have reported details of breaches of the United Nations mandatory arms embago of South Africa to the United Nations Security Council committee on the arms embargo established by resolution 421 of 1977.

Mr. Renton: There is no requirement to report such breaches to the United Nations Security Council committee on the arms embargo, but where the committee has asked for information we have always endeavoured to meet its requests. For example, we kept the committee fully informed of the Coventry case in 1984-85.

Mr. Cabora asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has discussed with the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany plans for the manufacture of submarines supplied from the Federal Republic of Germany to South Africa in breach of the United Nations mandatory arms embargo; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: It is not our practice to take up with other Governments allegations of breaches of the arms embargo. In accordance with accepted procedures, the matter is currently the subject of correspondence between the chairman of the Security Council committee established under Security Council resolution 421 (1977) and the Federal German Government.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to which members of the United Nations Security Council, other than the United Kingdom, expressed reservations or qualifications in relation to United Nations Security Council resolution 591 of 1986.

Mr. Renton: None expressed reservations or qualifications. In his statement following the adoption by consensus of Security Council resolution 591 the United States representative noted that the arms embargo was essentially directed at the South African military and police a point also made by the United Kingdom representative.

Mr. Caborn: asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government have reported to the United Nations Secretary-General on action taken to implement United Nations Security Council resolution 591 of 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No new action is necessary in the United Kingdom to implement United Nations Security Council resolution 591.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the qualifications expressed by Her Majesty's Government in relation to the United Nations Security Council resolution 591 of 1986.

Mr. Renton: The United Kingdom representative expressed British support for Security Council resolution 591 which we saw as a clarification of Security Council resolution 418. He noted that certain paragraphs should not be interpreted as restricting trade in items intended for non-military purposes, and placed the obligation with regard to military co-operation within the context of the Luxembourg and Nassau comminqués of September and October 1985. He also reiterated our view that peaceful means must be used to bring about an end to apartheid.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report the statement of the United Kingdom ambassador to the United Nations made following the vote adopting United Nations Security Council resolution 591 of 1986.

Mr. Renton: In view of its length, I am arranging for copies of the statement in question to be deposited in the Libraries of both Houses.

SCOTLAND

Fisheries Protection

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements are being made for airborne fisheries patrols between the conclusion of the existing contract at the end of May and the commencement of the new arrangement at the beginning of July; and if he is satisfied that the new aircraft and radar will be ready for operation in July.

Mr. John MacKay: Between the conclusion of the present arrangements and the commencement of the new arrangements the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland will deploy the inshore surveillance aircraft to cover offshore fisheries and a chartered Piper Aztec will maintain surveillance over coastal fisheries. I am assured that the new aircraft and radar are on programme for operation in July.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide figures showing, in comparable terms, the annual total cost of operating his Department's airborne fisheries patrols by RAF Nimrod, Dornier 228 with Benedix radar as operated under contract between September 1986 and May 1987 and Fokker F27-200 with Ferranti radar provided by his Department but operated and maintained under separate contracts as proposed for the future.

Mr. John MacKay: The best estimate that can be made of the costs which would have been incurred in operating the three types of aircraft with their different performance levels during the complete financial year 1986-87 are:

	£ million
Nimrod	2·4
Dornier 228	0·9
Fokker F27-200	1·2

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland why he is offering separate contracts for (a) operating inshore fisheries surveillance, (b) operating offshore fisheries surveillance and (c) maintaining his Department's fisheries surveillance aircraft and equipment; and if he has considered continuing any or all of those contracts.

Mr. John MacKay: The Department has had three years' experience in the operation of a charter aircraft and a further 2½ years' experience operating and maintaining a Government-owned aircraft for inshore surveillance but only seven months' experience in operating an aircraft, other than Nimrod, on offshore surveillance. It is considered prudent at present not to combine the various elements but to proceed on the basis of a separate contract for the operation and maintenance of the inshore aircraft and separate contracts for the operation and maintenance of the larger and more complex offshore aircraft. The award of a three-year operator/maintenance contract for the inshore aircraft, effective from September 1987, is imminent, and it is hoped that the operator and maintenance contractors for the offshore aircraft will be announced later this month.

National Heritage

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland which organisations have had grant assistance approved for 1987-88 under the National Heritage (Scotland) Act 1985; and what sum each will receive.

Mr. Rifkind: Grants available under the National Heritage (Scotland) Act 1985 for the financial year ending 31 March 1988 are as follows:

National Library of Scotland	5,132,000
National Museums of Scotland	5,017,000
National Galleries of Scotland	3,417,000
Scottish Museums Council	440,000

Royal Scottish Geographical Society	3,000
Cultural Organisations formerly grant-aided under the Further Education (Scotland) Regulations 1959
National Youth Orchestra of Scotland	23,000
Scottish Youth Theatre	39,500
Scottish Community Drama Association	24,000
Royal Scottish Pipe Band Association	5,000
Scottish Council for Dance	4,000

Comunn na Gaidhlig	45,000
Comhairle nan Sgoiltean Araich	32,000

NORTHERN IRELAND

Car Parks

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many car parks are still run by the Northern Ireland Department of the Environment; and if he will state reasons in each case why they have not yet been privatised or handed over to district councils.

Mr. Needham: There are 302 car parks still run by the Department of the Environment (NI); 228 of these are currently free car parks. Charges are levied in the remaining 74, mainly by the pay and display system. The Department is engaged in a programme of extending pay and display charging and a significant increase in the extension of the charging system needs to take place before an assessment of the cost-effectiveness of privatisation of car parks can be undertaken.

At present there are no plans to hand over car parks to district councils. However, councils will have the opportunity to compete with other interests when offers are invited at a later stage for the privatisation of car parks.

Farmers

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the approximate number of Northern Ireland farmers and the value of monetary compensation amounts payments owed them in connection with cattle purchases in the Irish Republic; for how long these payments have been outstanding; what representations have been made to the Irish authorities; with what result; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Green Currency Rates

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many differing green currency rates are operated throughout the entire European Economic Community.

Mr. Gummer: There are 40 green rates currently applying in the 12 member states of the European Community; six in France, five in the United Kingdom, four in Spain, two in Belgium and Luxembourg and three in all other member states.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the different green pound rates operative in various agricultural commodities and each individual rate for each type of cereals and other crops listed under cropping in the annual review of agriculture White Paper for (a) Great Britain, (b) Northern Ireland and (c) the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Gummer: The green rates currently applying thoughout the United Kingdom and in Ireland are as follows:

	United Kingdom	Ireland
Pigmeat	0·652575	0·821639
Beef and veal	0·668197
Sheepmeat	0·652575	0·817756
Other livestock products	0·635626
All arable products	0·626994	0·782478

Rights of Way

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to monitor and ensure the compliance by farmers with the code of practice on ploughing and rights of way published jointly by his Ministry and the Countryside Commission in July 1986.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Both the Countryside Commission and the Ramblers' Association are monitoring the effects of the ploughing code. ADAS staff in the field are aware of the code's provisions and will take account of it when advising farmers in circumstances where it is relevant.

Pesticides

Sir Richard Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will list the pesticides which have been approved for use in the United Kingdom and in respect of which toxicological data were submitted which originated from the International Bio Test laboratory.

Mr. Donald Thompson: To answer my hon. Friend's question in full would involve disproportionate cost. International Bio Test laboratories were involved in producing studies to support the registration of pesticides for over 10 years until 1978, but the question of fraudulent studies arose chiefly in the later years. In 1978 the United States authorities listed 123 products (both active ingredients and formulations) whose United States registration depended in part on IBT studies from all periods of the company's operation. The United Kingdom's examination in 1980 demonstrated 12 active ingredients which were of concern as a result and the Government's handling of these cases was detailed in the reply from my predecessor in this post to the hon. Member on 9 June 1986. No estimate is available of the number of studies which were judged at that time to give no grounds for concern.

Aluminium Cooking Utensils

Mr. Ashley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the variations in the extent to which particular foods dissolve aluminium from cooking utensils.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The interdepartmental steering group on food surveillance has examined information on aluminium in food from aluminium cookware. It has concluded that the contribution to the average dietary intake from this source was small.

Airborne Fishery Patrols

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement on the cost, efficiency and effectiveness of the airborne fishery patrols operated for his department in England and Wales and in the Falkland Islands;

(2) what aircraft and radar equipment are used for aiborne fishery patrols by his Department in England and Wales and in the Falkland Islands; and what contractual arrangements apply to the operation of this service.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend announced on 14 November 1985 the conclusions of a Government review of the arrangements for fisheres protection in the United Kingdom. On long-range aerial surveillance, where the role is more observation and collction of information rather than direct enforcement, Ministers concluded that the task could be carried out at lower cost using civilian aircraft of a lighter type than RAF Nimrods then employed for this task. Inshore aerial survillance would continue to be provided by civilian aircraft. Arrangements were put in hand to implement these conclusions.

At present, inshore surveillance patrols in England and Wales are undertaken by a Turbine Islander, while a Dornier 228 operates in offshore areas. A second Dornier 228 is due to come into service in July. The Turbine Islander and the Dornier are equipped with a Sperry Prisms 500 radar; both Dorniers will use a Bendix RDR 1500 radar as from July.

The operational requirements for serial surveillance are controlled by the Ministry, but the aircraft and their equipment are provided, and flown under contract by FR Aviation Limited at a cost of just over £2 million per annum over the next five years. This "turn-key" arrangement has proved to be a most cost-effective way of implementing the Ministry's aerial surveillance responsibilities.

The arrangements made by the Falkland Islands authorities for aerial surveillance of their waters are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

Food Aid

Mr. Pike asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many instances have occurred where supplies of surplus European Economic Community food being made available for free distribution have been found on sale in retail shops; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 389]: The Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce has detected three such cases involving a total of 81 retail-size packs of butter, and investigations of the circumstances are proceeding. All the butter concerned has been recovered for free distribution by charitable organisations to the most needy.

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will discuss the distribution arrangements for European Economic Community butter with the voluntary organisations which have been responsible for its distribution in Birmingham.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1987, c. 389]: My Department is in regular touch with the charitable organisations mentioned in my reply of 29 January to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes). They and others have put to us a number of points about distribution arrangements in Birmingham and other areas. The scheme ended on 31 March, but these observations will be noted for future reference.

Oils and Fats

Mrs. McCurley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the scope and nature of the proposed European Economic Community tax on oils and fats.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 31 March 1987, c. 445]: The European Commission's proposal for a vegetable and marine oil price stabilisation system would involve a tax on all refined vegetable and marine oils for human consumption, whether produced in the Community or imported from third countries with effect from 1 July 1987. The initial rate of tax is forecast at about £250 per tonne which would approximately double the price of refined oils subject to it. The Government are firmly opposed to this proposal.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Japan

Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a further statement on the problems arising from restrictions on Anglo-Japanese trade.

Mr. Alan Clark: We and our Community partners are determined to reduce restrictions on Anglo-Japanese trade, whether formal or resulting from structural macro economic factors. To this end we have called on Japan to implement the Maekawa report recommendations and to proceed more rapidly with its action plan for market access. Where specific problems arise, for example on alcoholic drinks, we are pursuing these vigorously through the GATT.

South Africa

Mr. Cabora asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, in the light of the adoption of United Nations Security Council resolution 591 of 1986, Her Majesty's Government will review their decision to license the export to South Africa of the Plessey AR3D military radar system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Mr. Cabora asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the export of Landrovers to South Africa for use by the South African military and police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Exports of vehicles specially designed for military purposes are subject to control to all destinations under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1985, as amended. The Government fully comply with the United Nations arms embargo against South Africa.

Mr. Cabora asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action has been taken since 28 November 1986 to implement the ban, in United Nations Security Council resolution 591, on the export to South Africa of (a) aircraft, (b) aircraft engines, (c) aircraft spares, (d) electronic and telecommunication equipment, (e) computers and (f) four-wheel drive vehicles, destined for the military or police forces and which have a military capacity or are intended for military purposes.

Mr. Alan Clark: None is required. Security Council resolution No. 591, which is non-mandatory, is a clarification of the 1977 embargo, which we already fully implement, and not an extension of its provisions.

Television Pictures by Telephone (Exhibition)

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to television pictures by telephone for defence and security to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Pattie: Arrangements have been made for such an exhibition in the Upper Waiting Hall to take place from Monday 4 May to Friday 8 May 1987.

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the total expenditure by all Government Departments on Westland in each of the last five years.

Mr. Pattie [pursuant to his reply, 18 March 1987, c. 525]: Government expenditure on Westland in the financial years 1981-82 to 1985-86 (the last full years for which figures are available) was as follows:

DTI	£'000
1981-82	181
1982-83	10,100
1983-84	10,813
1984-85	17,847
1985-86	8,667

MOD: In each of the above years the company was paid over £150 million (at the price levels for the relevant years) by the Ministry of Defence.

TRANSPORT

Heavy Goods Vehicles (Sideguards)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to bring to the attention of haulage contractors the requirement to install sideguards on heavy goods vehicles; and what steps he has taken to monitor their effectiveness.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The regulations have had very wide publicity and I believe haulage contractors know their legal obligations. The effect should in due course show in a reduction in the number of pedestrians and cyclists killed or severely injured by heavy goods vehicles. This is monitored through the accident reporting system.

Motorways (Crash Barriers)

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps he proposes to take to ascertain whether steel motorway crash barriers have been installed correctly;

(2) if he will publish the construction specification of steel motorway crash barriers relevant to their original installation;

(3) if he will estimate how many miles of steel motorway crash barrier have been installed to sub-standard specification;

(4) if he is satisfied with the standard of construction of steel motorway crash barriers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Detailed inspection of safety fences are being made where land closures are required for major carriageway works that give access to safety fences. These inspections are in addition to those being carried out under a code of practice for routine maintenance introduced in 1985.

A specification for tensioned corrugated beam safety fences, the most common type of fence used on motorways, was first issued in 1969. It has been revised several times since then. All specifications have been published and are listed as follows:

Specification for Road and Bridge Works—4th Edition 1969.

Technical Memorandum No. H9/73, Safety Fences 1973.

Specification for Road and Bridge Works—5th Edition 1976.

Specification for Road and Bridge Works—Supplement No. 1 1978.

Specification for Highway Works—6th Edition 1986. To be implemented in 1988.

A reliable estimate of the length of safety fences that does not meet our specification cannot be made. The inspections already referred to are designed to identify the conditions of safety fences and remedial works required. We estimate that detailed inspections this year will cover a sample of up to about 150 miles of motorway safety fences.

Research has shown that the safety fences generally perform well, and I have no reason at present to believe that they are not constructed generally to a satisfactory standard.

I refer my hon. Friend to my answer of 25 March to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, Acton (Sir G. Young), and my subsequent letter to him of 27 March, a copy of which is in the Library.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Care in the Community

Mr. Dubs asked the Seretary of State for Social Services how many elderly, mentally ill and mentally handicapped patients have been dischaged from hospital under the care in the community programme for each year since it began.

Mrs. Currie: Information on the numbers of patients discharged from hospital under the care in the community programme is not collected centrally. Using duration of stay information collected in the mental health inquiry, an indication of the number of mentally ill and mentally handicapped people who have been settled in the community after, in effect, living in hospital can be derived from statistics of those discharged after stays of five years or more as given in the table. Some of these people may need to be readmitted for a time; for example, because of changes in their condition. Duration of stay information is not colleected centrally for elderly patients and it is therefore not possible to derive a similar indication for them from the figures.

Discharges[1] from mental illness and mental handicap hospitals and units in England after durations of stay of 5 years or more (excluding transfers to other NHS hospitals and special hospitals)

Year	Mental Illness	Mental handicap
1983	821	967
1984	981	1,375
1985	986	1,522

[1] Excludes transfer to other NHS hospitals and Special hospitals.
Note: 1986 figures not yet available.

Mentally Handicappd Patient (Sterilisation)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the effects on his policy for mentally handicapped people of the recent Appeal Court ruling approving of the sterilisation of a 17-year-old mentally handicapped patient.

Mrs. Currie: Whether sterilisation is advisable for any mentally handicapped child or adult, and the rights and duties of the individual, parents and others concerned, are important and difficult issues on which up to now the law has not been entirely clear. Following the recent appeal court ruling in an individual case, the House of Lords heard an appeal on 2 April, and the Government will await the outcome before considering what further action may be necessary.

Special Hospitals

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons were detained under section 47 of the Mental Health Act 1983 in special hospitals in the last four years for which records are kept, broken down by special hospitals.

Mrs. Currie: The numbers of patients detained under section 47 of the Mental Health Act 1983 in each of the four special hospitals, as at 31 December 1983, 1984 and 1985 (the last year for which figures are available) were as follows:

Special Hospital	31 December 1983	31 December 1984	31 December 1985
Broadmoor	39	31	36
Rampton	41	50	52
Moss Side	5	9	12
Park Lane	22	32	51

Records kept for the years prior to 1983 do not identify separately the number of patients detained under the equivalent of section 47.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the ethnic origin of persons detained under section 47 of the Mental Health Act 1983 in special hospitals in the last four years for which records are kept, broken down by special hospitals;

(2) if he will list the ethnic origin of persons detained in special hospitals in the last four years for which figures are available, broken down by special hospital and by sections of the Mental Health Act or other legislation under which persons were detained.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not available.

Dystrophic Epidermolysis Bullosa

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what research is being financed by his Department into the rare disease called dystrophic epidermolysis bullosa.

Mrs. Currie: The main Government agency for the promotion of medical and related biological research in the United Kingdom is the Medical Research Council (MRC) which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science.

This Department and the MRC are not at present funding research into dystrophic epidermolysis bullosa.

COMA

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Seretary of State for Social Services when he received the report of the working groups of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy (COMA) on dietary matters; when it is to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I assume my hon. Friend is referring to the report of the COMA working group on very low calorie diets. I refer him to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ashford (Mr. Speed) on 26 March at column 259.

Family Heart Association (Exhibition)

Mr. Ashby asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if his department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Family Heart Association to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 27 April 1987 to 1 May 1987.

Artificial Limbs and Appliances

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations his Department has received from the Muscular Dystrophy Group of Great Britain and Northern Ireland concerning the Government's decisions on the future of the services provided by artificial limb and appliance centres; what reply has been sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The Muscular Dystrophy Group of Great Britain and Northern Ireland submitted a detailed response to the McColl report on artificial limb and appliance centre services immediately following its publication. Since then, its view that the recommendation to provide dual-purpose powered wheelchairs should be implemented as a matter of urgency has been the subject of a number of letters received from local branches of the group. In addition, on 7 May 1986, my predecessor accepted a petition from Sir Richard Attenborough, the president of the group, in support of this request.

On the specific point of dual-purpose powered wheelchairs the Muscular Dystrophy Group has been advised that there are major cost considerations still to be resolved and that a final decision has not yet been made.

On the wider issue of the future of the artificial limb and appliance centre services, I refer the right hon. Member to my statement to the House on 10 March 1987 at columns 149-51.

Vaccine Damage

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applicants for the vaccine damage payment have had their application rejected because their application was out of time.

Mr. Lyell: At 6 March 1987, the latest date for which information is available, 73 claims had been rejected because they were out of time.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure that in every centre where vaccination is carried out there is a poster drawing attention to the provision of a vaccine damage payment.

Mr. Lyell: We have no plans to do so. General information about the vaccine damage payments scheme is contained in our leaflets dealing with benefits for sick and disabled people. These leaflets are freely available at local social security offices and post offices. In addition, the Health Education Council publishes leaflets on whooping cough and on immunisation generally which set out clearly all the facts on vaccination. These are available to the public.

Benefits

Mr. Alfed Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to the reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, on 11 March, Official Report, column 230, he will state the value of each of the benefits listed for a single person without dependants at 1986-87 prices in 1978-79 and 1986-87; if he will indicate those benefits which have increased by 30 per cent. in real terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The table shows the average rates of the relevant benefits in constant 1986-87 prices. It should be stressed that the figures in the table relate to specified basic rates of benefit rather than to the average amount received by an individual sick or disabled person. The latter amount increased by roughtly 9 per cent. in real terms over the period; the figure of 30 per cent. relates to the proportion of the total increase in expenditure due to increases in average amounts rather than increases in numbers of beneficiaries.

Average rates of benefit paid to a single person, 1978-79 and 1986-87 at 1986-87 prices

	1978-79 average £	1986-87 average £	Percentage change 1978-79 to 1986-87
Invalidity Benefit	35·35	38·55	9
Sickness Benefit	29·30	29·35	0·2
Industrial Disablement Benefit (100% rate)	57·85	62·95	9
Attendance Allowance (Higher Rate)	28·30	30·85	9
Attendance Allowance (Lower rate)	18·85	20·60	9
Severe Disablement Allowance	21·20	23·15	9
Mobility Allowance	15·60	21·55	38
Invalid Care Allowance	21·20	23·15	9
War disablement pension (100% rate, lowest rank)	57·85	62·95	9
Christmas Bonus[1]	19·45	10·00	−49
Supplementary benefit[2]	28·90	29·70	3
Standard housing benefit[3]	50·45	47·95	−5

[1] The comparison is between the Christmas bonus paid in December 1978 and that paid in December 1986.
[2] This comparison is between the average (1978-79 and 1986-87) ordinary scale rates for single householders used in calculating supplementary benefit entitlement both in 1986-87 prices. The structure of supplementary benefit is such that the scale rate is only an imprecise guide to the amount of benefit actually paid.
[3] The comparison is between the average 1978-79 and 1986-87 needs allowance for a single person. As for supplementary benefit, such a comparison is not an accurate guide to the amount of benefit actually paid.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated cost in benefits in a full year of unemployed school leavers between the ages of 16 and 18; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide estimates of the numbers of (a) family income supplement recipients and (b) standard housing benefit recipients by earnings distribution using the following ranges of gross weekly earnings (i) below £80, (ii) £80 to £90, (iii) £90 to £100, (iv) £100 to £110, (v) £110 to £120 and (vi) above £120; and if he will indicate the average amount of benefit paid to those falling within each of these ranges.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Senile Dementia

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the number of people suffering from progressive senile dementia.

Mrs. Currie: Various estimates, including those of the Health Advisory Service in its 1982 report "The Rising Tide", and those of the Royal College of Physicians in its 1981 report on "Organic Mental Impairment in the Elderly", put the prevalence of dementia in the elderly at between 5 per cent. and 10 per cent. in those over the age of 65, and around 20 per cent. in those over the age of 80. However, such estimates must be treated with caution, since functional psychiatric illness and confusional states in the elderly can be confused with dementia. Long-term studies are needed to provide more accurate estimates of incidence, and one such study is currently under consideration by the Medical Research Council.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the revenue surplus or deficit, and the level of annual spending, of each district health authority at the end of each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Medicines

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will consult with doctors on whether further opportunities exist to reduce the number of drugs available on the limited list; if he will further consider the effects of such a reduction on patient care; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what measures he is taking to foster competition between drug manufacturing companies in the provision of medicines; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will consider whether the system of licensing and approving new improved drugs could be assisted by encouraging limited trials within the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have replies as soon as possible.

War Widows (Pensions)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the cost of providing an additional £10 pension per week for war widows who were widowed before 1974; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lyell: It is estimated that the cost would be in the region of £30 million a year.

War widows pensions are the same irrespective of the date of widowhood or the conflict in which the service man was injured or gave his life.

The basic war widows pension will be increased to £51·35 a week from 6 April. That is about 30 per cent. higher than national insurance widows pension. In addition, age allowances are paid. They are also being increased from 6 April, to £5·50 a week at age 65, £11 at 70 and £13·85 at 80. The pensions are tax free. War widows may also receive other benefits, such as a retirement pension if they have paid national insurance contributions, and housing benefit.

Meningitis

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he takes to ensure that all cases of meningitis are reported to the communicable disease surveillance centre.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 16 March 1987, c. 412]: Meningitis, as a notifiable disease, is required to be notified to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys (OPCS) through the medical officer for environmental health, and not to the communicable disease surveillance centre (CDSC). However, CDSC does receive reports from public health laboratories of all cases of meningitis confirmed in the laboratory, and has prepared a composite of these reports and the notifications to OPCS. A comparative study has shown that there is a high degree of concordance between the two sets of figures.

Mentally Handicapped People

Mrs. Shields asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards civil rights for mentally handicapped people.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 2 April 1987]: The Government's policy is that people with a mental handicap should, within their capacity to exercise those rights directly and through the advocacy of others where necessary, have the same basic rights as everyone else; and should in addition be entitled to enabling support according to their current individual needs.

Health Centre, Moulsecoombe

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to persuade the South-East regional health authority that the proposed start date for the health centre on the Moulsecoombe estate should be brought forward from 1992 in line with its agreed priority for the area.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 2 April 1987]: The views of local general practitioners are being sought by Brighton health authority on whether or not a health centre on the Moulsecoombe estate in Brighton would best meet local primary health care needs. The planning of local health services is primarily a matter for individual health authorities. The hon. Member may therefore care to address any further inquiries to the chairman of Brighton health authority.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 113

SESSION 1986–87

23rd March—3rd April 1987

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speakers rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
